SHOP LOCAL HANCEVILLE - UPGRADE MASTER FILE
==========
The one master file for the professional upgrade of https://shoplocalhanceville.github.io/
Prepared for Charles Adams (owner), October 19, 2026.

WHAT IS INSIDE PART A - The Professional Upgrade Blueprint: the plan and the decisions record.
PART B - The eleven specifications the work is built from:
         01 Design, 02 User-Friendliness, 03 Writing, 04 Photos, 04B Officials' Portraits, 05 Free Infrastructure, 06 Competitive Teardown, 07 Reviews, 08 Immersion, 09 Performance, 10 Freshness, 11 Gloss Finish.
PART C - The Master Upgrade File: the single submission document for Grok - overriding orders, the glossy black purple and white theme (Wallace State orange blue and white), toolbars and tab bar, all 33 features, the operating schedule, and bot instructions for each of 744 listings.

HOW TO USE IT
- Charles reads this PDF.
- Copilot gets this PDF attached in a chat.
- Grok gets the Master Upgrade File text (Part C) from the companion ZIP, Shop_Local_Hanceville_UPGRADE_MASTER.zip, which holds every source file separately.
- The directory, links, and 725 logos live in the main Master files (Shop_Local_Hanceville_MASTER.pdf and .zip).

PART A - THE PROFESSIONAL UPGRADE BLUEPRINT
==========

PROFESSIONAL UPGRADE BLUEPRINT - SHOP LOCAL HANCEVILLE For Charles Adams, owner, and Grok, his website bot (Copilot on the coding side). Prepared October 19, 2026 from ten professional research studies commissioned by Charles. Everything in this blueprint is free to implement. Website:
https://shoplocalhanceville.github.io/

HOW TO USE THIS BLUEPRINT
This blueprint is the master plan for taking Shop Local Hanceville to a fully professional, fully immersive standard. It EXTENDS the standing instruction files (Grok_Website_Instructions.txt and Copilot_Website_Instructions.txt) and the Master File; where this blueprint or its spec files speak on design, features, writing, or freshness schedules, they govern. The safety rules in the standing instructions (before/after scans, never-link domains, nothing publishes without Charles's approval) are unchanged and bind every phase. The detailed specifications live in ten companion spec files, which are part of this blueprint:
  Spec 01 Design System (layout, theme, colors, icons, evenness)

Spec 02 User-Friendliness and Accessibility (24 must-do rules)
Spec 03 Writing and Voice (voice guide, microcopy, examples)
Spec 04 Photos and Images (verified free real local photos)
Spec 04B Officials' Portraits (45 verified portraits + rosters)
Spec 05 Free Infrastructure (search, structured data, tools)
Spec 06 Competitive Teardown (the best sites, and what to steal)
Spec 07 Reviews System (what is lawful, and the design)
Spec 08 Immersive Interaction (swiping, zooming, tab bar, links)
Spec 09 Implementation and Performance (budgets, embed handling)
Spec 10 Freshness Automation (the operating schedule)
Spec 11 Gloss Finish (the sleek glossy finish for the black, purple, and white theme and the Wallace orange/blue/white theme, tuned color values, the redesigned toolbars and tab bar, and the visual QA checklist)
The Master Upgrade File - the single submission file that carries these orders plus per-listing bot instructions for all 744 listings (Parts 0-6)

THE STANDARD IN ONE PARAGRAPH

The site's own black, purple, and white theme, which is Charles's standing choice and overrides the palette research in Spec 01 (all other Spec 01 rules - spacing, type, icons, evenness - stand). Purple is the primary accent on black and white surfaces, tuned so every text/background pairing still passes the 4.5-to-1 contrast rule in Spec 02 in both the light and dark themes. One exception, also Charles's direction: WALLACE STATE pages and information wear Wallace State's own orange, blue, and white theme - when a visitor opens Wallace State content, that view's accents switch to orange and blue on white (blue carries text; orange is the accent, since orange text on white fails contrast), and leaving Wallace State content returns the site to black, purple, and white. The swap is a theme-token change on the same machinery as the light/dark themes, so every upgrade in this blueprint applies identically in both themes. One self-hosted typeface, the Lucide icon family everywhere (Tabler only for the Facebook glyph), body text at least 17px, nothing tappable under 44px, every layout on one even spacing system with a bot-run evenness checklist, writing in the knowledgeable-neighbor voice of Spec 03 with facts never invented, real Cullman County photography from Spec 04, and hard performance budgets from Spec 09 (home page at most 650 KB first load; total site script at most 150 KB) so the site feels instant on an ordinary phone.

PHASE 1 - FOUNDATION (build first, in this order)

1. Fill every logo field from the Master File collection (725 logos; the site's code already displays them; today only 11 of 340 records carry one). Add the officials' portraits from Spec 04B to the government and department listings, each with the office's official Facebook embed beneath it, as Charles directed. Note: Mayor Nolan Bradford's portrait now exists on the City of Hanceville site and is in Spec 04B.
2. Apply the Spec 01 design system: palette, type scale, spacing rhythm, card anatomy, and the Section 17 evenness standard (equal card heights, action buttons pinned to one line across each row, reserved text blocks, one image shape: 4:3).

3. Replace every icon on the site with the Spec 01 icon mapping (Lucide; one family, one stroke weight, labeled always). This includes the tab bar.
4. Place the Spec 04 photography: Ave Maria Grotto hero (free, verified), town banners for the towns that have verified photos, category headers, with photographer credits where the license asks. Towns without a lawful photo get the honest routes in Spec 04, never a wrong-place picture (Spec 04 lists the traps by name).
5. Run the Spec 03 copy pass over every page: headlines, buttons, badges, empty states, the 404 page, and the Register page use the microcopy bank verbatim; listing descriptions follow the three-part formula (what it is, one verified distinguishing fact, one useful detail), modeled on the ten gold-standard examples. Full-site spelling and name-accuracy proofread. The About page draft in Spec 03 is written in Charles's voice and publishes ONLY with his personal approval.
6. Apply Spec 02's 24 must-do rules (readability, tap targets, navigation grouped into eight plain-word sections, forgiving search with everyday-word synonyms and a real zero-results recovery page, the fixed card order, the "didn't load, try again" state, form rules, WCAG 2.2 AA checklist) and pass its ten-point acceptance test on a real phone.
7. Apply Spec 05's free infrastructure: Google Search Console (URL-prefix property, sitemap submitted; Charles performs the one-time ownership verification himself), Bing Webmaster import, WebSite/Organization/Breadcrumb/Event structured data and ItemList of LocalBusiness per town page with verified fields only, full sharing tags on every page, and the Register page nudge for owners to claim their free Google Business Profile with matching name, address, and phone. (Verified dead ends, do not chase: FAQ rich results were retired by Google in 2026; the carousel rich result is not open to US sites.)

PHASE 2 - FEATURES AND IMMERSION

8. Complete the fifteen features from the standing instructions (logos, consistent fields, hours and Open Now, installable app, hero and live weather, on-device favorites, Add to Calendar and countdown and town filter, map page, polish set, listing photos, Business Spotlight, school strip, Lost and Found Pets, New in Town badge, printable town sheets), using Spec 08's interaction patterns and Spec 09's budgets.
9. Immersion set (Spec 08): swipeable photo galleries and card rails on native scroll-snap (85% width with the next item peeking, arrows always visible, dots AND a words counter); the dialog lightbox for photo and logo zoom with labeled Bigger/Smaller/Fit buttons (pinch is a bonus, never required); the FIXED bottom tab bar with icon-plus-word tabs, an Events count badge, and a purple new-listings dot; permanent per-listing deep links (directory.html#listing-name) that land on the card; share with the three-rung fallback; print-only QR codes. Rejected as gimmicks (do not build): parallax, hero video, scroll-jacking, vibration feedback, on-screen QR codes. Prefetching (Speculation Rules) makes navigation feel instant; it stands down on Save-Data connections.

10. Embed engineering (Spec 09): every listing's Facebook embed uses the snapshot-facade pattern: the listing shows its card first, and the live Page Plugin wakes when the card is tapped or nears the screen; at most 2 embeds loading at once, at most 6 live per page; reserved fixed-height boxes so nothing shifts; the iframe route on listing pages (the shared SDK only on Charles's own Pages page); a 6-second watchdog that falls back to the snapshot card with a "See it on Facebook" button, and reports dead embeds by name.
11. REVIEWS (Spec 07) - build the on-site system: a 1-to-5 star form on each listing (large radio stars with word labels, older-user first), submissions landing in the moderation queue, NOTHING public until Charles approves it; a civil, factual negative review is approved on the same terms as a positive one (star-neutrality), with rejections logged by reason (fake, abuse, duplicate). Display, once a listing has at least 3 approved reviews: the overall grade (average stars, one decimal) and the percentage labeled in words ("91% of reviewers rated it 4 or 5 stars"). Sources are NEVER blended. Google, Yelp, and Facebook reviews are LINKED, not copied: Google's terms forbid storing its reviews, Yelp's API is paid and its terms forbid showing its ratings alongside other reviews, and Facebook ratings are readable only for Charles's own Pages. Each listing links out: "Read reviews on Google," "See reviews on Yelp," "See reviews on Facebook," wherever that listing has them. Review structured data covers the site's OWN collected reviews only (Spec 07 explains why that is both lawful and eligible). No incentives for reviews, no gating, ever (federal Consumer Review Rule).
12. Steal list (Spec 06), the best of it: the county's "What do you need to do today?" task grid on the home page; Visit Cullman's photo-tile category doors; a site-wide alert banner slot used sparingly and linked to Cullman County EMA; a "New to Hanceville?" newcomer page; "Links last checked" stamps that turn the safety checks into visible trust. Avoid list is binding: no paid placement, no imported star ratings, no pop-ups, no account walls, no wrong-place stock photos.

PHASE 3 - CHARLES'S CHOICES (build only what he picks)
==========

- Individual listing pages (about 1,074) so a shared link previews that business itself, not just the directory page.
- A fifth "Saved" tab in the tab bar (Spec 08 keeps four as the standard; five is Charles's call).
- Google Places UI Kit for live Google reviews later: it bills per load past a free monthly allowance and needs a Google billing account with a card on file. Against Charles's no-payment standing order, the default is NO; revisit only if he says so.

- Visitor counting: the privacy-clean free option in Spec 05 (Cloudflare Web Analytics) or none. Default: none until he chooses.

THE OPERATING SCHEDULE (Spec 10) - Grok's standing duties
- HOURLY, 6:00 AM to 6:00 PM Alabama time: verify the social embeds (Charles's two Pages first, then a rotating twelfth of the listings), refresh any snapshot cards, and log problems. Embeds themselves are live: a visitor always sees the page's newest post when the embed loads; the hourly duty is verification, not republishing. Problems climb the ladder in Spec 10: log quietly, fix-and-note in the daily report, same-day message for real breakage, immediate message for tampering.
- TWICE-DAILY UPDATE PASSES, 6:45 AM and 4:30 PM Alabama time: before-scan, events and Bulldogs scores from the schools' own pages, weather-strip source check (watches and warnings link to Cullman County EMA), snapshot refreshes, Charles-approved registrations and listing changes published, after-scan, plain-word commit to Git (one change-set per commit; is rolled back first and reported second). One daily report after the afternoon pass, problems first.
- The six-hour independent check from Charles's Muse assistant continues as watchdog; Grok and the watchdog never silently resolve a disagreement — it goes to Charles.
- HONEST LIMIT, stated once: Grok runs these schedules inside Charles's own Grok account. Published plan details give a free account two daily scheduled tasks, which fits the two update passes exactly; hourly runs depend on his plan's automation features. If hourly Grok runs are not available on his plan, the standing fallback is the two passes plus the six-hour watchdog, and visitors lose nothing, because the embeds refresh themselves at load. Grok reports which cycles actually ran in the daily report (for example, "11 of 13").

1. Approve the About page draft in Spec 03 (written in his voice).
2. Reviews display: links-only for Google/Yelp/Facebook (the free route, recommended) — confirm, or revisit the paid Google kit.
3. Phase 3 picks: individual listing pages? A fifth Saved tab?
4. Visitor counting: Cloudflare's free privacy-clean counter, or none at all.
5. Confirm the Spec 10 schedule as Grok's standing orders, knowing the hourly piece depends on his Grok plan.

PART B - THE ELEVEN SPECIFICATIONS

SPEC 01_design_system.md

> OWNER'S AMENDMENT (October 19, 2026): The color palette > researched in this file (deep green/gold/cream) is OVERRIDDEN by > Charles Adams. The site's theme is BLACK, PURPLE, AND WHITE > (purple primary accent), tuned to pass Spec 02's 4.5:1 contrast > rules in both light and dark themes. WALLACE STATE pages and > information use orange, blue, and white (blue for text, orange > as accent) as a theme-token swap on the same machinery. Every > other specification in this file (spacing, typography, icons, > evenness) stands as written.

Shop Local Hanceville — Design System Specification Layout, Theme, and Visual Design (Area 01 of the Professional Upgrade)

Prepared for Charles Adams, October 19, 2026. Companion to the Website Feature Audit and the Copilot/Grok instruction files. This document is a descriptive specification: it states exactly what the site should look like and how it should be laid out, in values a builder bot can apply directly in the site's existing hand-written HTML/CSS/JS. It contains no code files and assumes zero budget: GitHub Pages hosting, free fonts, free icons, no frameworks, no libraries.

The audience drives every choice below: small-town Alabama residents, many of them older, most on phones, some using large phone text settings or screen readers. "Professional" for this audience means calm, consistent, high-contrast, big-tap-target design — the GOV.UK / USWDS lesson is that clarity and consistency are what read as trustworthy and award-level on a civic site, not visual effects.

What stays the same (already decided or already working)
- The light/dark theme toggle, its memory of the visitor's choice, and its respect for the phone's own setting. This spec refines the colors inside that mechanism; it does not replace the mechanism.
- The star as the brand mark. This spec turns it into real icon files (the audit found the favicon is currently a star emoji and favicon.ico returns 404).
- The logo standard Charles already set: every organization's logo on the same square canvas, trimmed, centered, proportional, using the normalized copies. This spec sets the display boxes those canvases sit in.
- The features already ordered (hero with weather strip, Facebook embed per listing, Open Now badges, Register page, favorites, map, events upgrades). This spec covers how they look, not whether they exist.
- Performance rules from the standing instructions: web-sized images only, embeds load lazily, nothing heavy. The font plan below honors the standing "one small web font at most" rule exactly.

Six design principles (the short version everything else follows)

1. Search first. The homepage's job is to get a resident to a phone number, address, or open business in seconds. Why: attention research shows roughly 57% of viewing time lands above the fold and 74% in the first two screenfuls, so the hero and the section right after it do nearly all the work.
2. One system, no improvisation. Every color, size, and space on the site comes from the token tables in Sections 1–4. Why: a page built from a small fixed set of values looks designed; a page built from one-off values looks homemade, even when each value is fine.
3. Big, calm, high-contrast. Body text 18px, tap targets 48px, body-text contrast aimed at 7:1 where achievable, 4.5:1 as the floor, never the target. Why: older eyes, bright sun on phone screens, and inexpensive screens all eat contrast and size.
4. Consistency beats cleverness. The same card, the same section header, the same button, everywhere. Why: residents learn the site once and reuse that learning on every page; scanning depends on fields never changing order.
5. Honest imagery. Real Hanceville photos and real logos only; a clean typographic treatment beats a stock photo of somewhere else. Why: local visitors recognize their own town and see through stock instantly, and trust is this site's whole product.
6. Motion is a whisper. Short fades and state changes only, nothing that moves on its own, everything off for visitors who ask their phone for reduced motion. Why: motion sensitivity is common in this audience and decoration never outranks comfort.

1. DESIGN TOKENS — HOW EVERY VALUE IS ORGANIZED

All visual values live in one place at the top of the stylesheet as named tokens (CSS custom properties), in two layers:

- Primitive tokens name raw values: the pine scale, the gold, the clay, the neutrals, the spacing steps, the type sizes.
- Semantic tokens name jobs: page background, card surface, body text, muted text, border, primary action, link, focus ring, and one background/foreground pair per status (success, warning, error, info). Page and component rules may use semantic tokens only, never raw hex.

Why: this is the standard design-token structure (primitive feeding semantic), and it is what makes the light/dark themes cheap to keep: each theme reassigns the semantic tokens once, and every component follows. It also means a future color change is a one-line edit instead of a site-wide hunt.

Theme application: the site's existing toggle switches the token set. The default follows the phone's light/dark setting; a manual choice is remembered, exactly as the site already behaves. Both themes are fully specified in Section 2 — dark is designed, not inverted.

Naming pattern to use (descriptive, job-based):
background, surface, surface-alt, surface-raised, text, text-muted, border, border-strong, primary, primary-hover, primary-active, on-primary, accent, gold-bg, gold-text, secondary, on-secondary, link, focus, success-bg, success-text, warning-bg, warning-text, error-bg, error-text, info-bg, info-text, header-bg, header-text, footer-bg, footer-text.

2. COLOR PALETTE — DEEP PINE AND HARVEST GOLD
==========
Direction in one paragraph: warm, trustworthy, civic Main Street, drawn from the materials of the place — deep pine green from the woods around Cullman County, harvest gold for the star and small highlights, clay/brick as a sparing warm secondary, warm paper and limestone neutrals instead of stark white and gray. It reads Southern by material, not by stereotype: no plaid, no barn-kitsch, no sepia filters. Deep green plus warm neutrals plus restrained gold is also the visual language of park services, libraries, and land-grant universities, which is why it reads as civic and established rather than commercial. It also deliberately differs from government blue, so the site has its own identity next to city and county sites.

Why pine as the primary: it is stable and trustworthy, it is not the default civic blue every government site uses, and dark greens pass contrast checks with white text across many shades, which golds and reds do not. Why gold only as an accent: at text sizes, gold fails contrast against both white and most backgrounds, so gold is reserved for the star, thin rules, pale-gold callout backgrounds with dark text, and large display fills — never body text, never a button with white text. A documented cautionary example: the Beeline design system retired its bright brand green from all non-decorative UI because it failed WCAG AA and hurt legibility at small sizes; bright gold has the same failure mode, so this palette keeps gold decorative or pairs it with near-black text only.

Contrast rules that govern every pair below (WCAG 2.2 AA):
- Normal text (under 24px, or under ~18.7px bold): 4.5:1 minimum, no rounding up — 4.49 does not pass. Body text aims for 7:1.
- Large text (24px and up, or ~18.7px bold and up): 3:1 minimum.
- Button borders, input borders, meaningful icons, and the focus indicator: 3:1 against the adjacent color.
- Meaning is never carried by color alone: "Open Now" is a dot plus words plus the closing time, not just a green dot.
- Every pair in these tables must be run through a contrast checker (WebAIM or axe) against the actual surface it sits on before it ships; muted text on the tinted surface-alt background is the pair most likely to fail and must be checked on both backgrounds.

2A. Light theme tokens
Token	Hex	Used for background	#FFFBF1	Page background — warm paper, not stark white

surface	#FFFFFF	Cards, header dropdowns, form fields surface-alt	#F5EFE0	Alternating section bands, unselected chips, logo box backing on white cards surface-raised	#FFFFFF	Modals and menus (distinguished by shadow, Section 4)
text	#1F2420	Body text — green-tinted near-black, ~15:1 on background text-muted	#4F4A3E	Secondary text — warm dark gray, ~7:1 on background; verify on surface-alt too border	#D8CFB8	Decorative card borders and dividers border-strong	#8A7D5C	Borders that identify an interactive element (inputs, chips) — chosen to reach ~3:1
primary	#1E4D3B	Deep pine — primary buttons, links, selected states; white on it ~9:1
primary-hover	#163A2C	Primary hover/pressed-lighter state primary-active	#10291F	Primary active state, darkest step on-primary	#FFFFFF	Text and icons on primary accent (gold)	#D9A441	Decorative only — star fill, 3–4px rules, large display fills gold-bg	#FCEFC7	Pale gold callouts and "New in Town" badge background, always with dark text gold-text	#7A5A00	Gold-family text on light surfaces (eyebrow labels), large or semibold only secondary (clay)	#9C3D2E	Secondary buttons and badges — white on it ~5.5:1
on-secondary	#FFFFFF	Text on clay link	#1E4D3B	Same pine as primary; always underlined in body copy focus	#B7791F	Focus outline — 3px with 2px offset; must read 3:1 on background and on surface success-bg / success-text	#E6F4EA / #14532D	"Open Now" and confirmations (~7:1 pair) warning-bg / warning-text	#FEF3C7 / #7A4A00	Weather watches, cautions error-bg / error-text	#FDECEA / #7F1D1D	"Closed" status, form errors
info-bg / info-text	#E8F1F5 / #234E68	Informational notes, denim family header-bg / header-text	#1E4D3B / #FFFFFF	Pine header band, gold star, white wordmark footer-bg / footer-text	#163A2C / #F3EDDD	Deep pine footer in both themes (Section 10)

2B. Dark theme tokens (derived, never inverted) Derivation rules applied: keep the hue families, raise lightness and lower saturation of accents to roughly 70–80% of their light-mode saturation (saturated colors vibrate on dark); never pure black or pure white; elevation is shown by lighter surfaces, not shadows (cards one step lighter than the page, menus one step more); links and the primary lighten until they pass 4.5:1 on dark surfaces; light text on dark reads slightly heavier, so heading weight may drop one step (700 to 600) in dark only — sizes never shrink.

Token	Hex	Note
background	#121613	Green-charcoal, not black surface	#1C221E	Cards — one step lighter than background surface-alt	#242B26	Bands, header, menus — second step surface-raised	#2A322C	Modals and dropdowns — third step text	#EDE8DC	Warm off-white, ~13:1 on background
text-muted	#BDB6A4	~7:1 on background border	#3A423C	Decorative borders border-strong	#5A645C	Interactive-element borders primary	#5FAE8A	Pine lightened and desaturated for dark primary-hover	#74BE9A
primary-active	#8FD0B2
on-primary	#0F1D16	Dark text on the lightened pine — white on #5FAE8A would fail accent (gold)	#E9B949	Brightened star; still decorative/large only gold-bg	#2E2A18	Dark gold-brown callout background
gold-text	#F5D78A	Gold-family text on dark secondary (clay)	#E08A7A	Clay lightened for dark on-secondary	#2A130E	Dark text on the lightened clay

link	#8FD0B2	Underlined in body copy focus	#E9B949	Gold focus ring reads clearly on dark green success-bg / success-text	#1A2E22 / #A7D7B5
warning-bg / warning-text	#2E2A18 / #F5D78A
error-bg / error-text	#2E1E1C / #F0A8A0
info-bg / info-text	#182830 / #9CC3D9
header-bg / header-text	#242B26 / #EDE8DC	Surface step, gold star, off-white wordmark
footer-bg / footer-text	#0C100D / #EDE8DC	One step darker than the page

Header note: in the light theme the header is the pine brand band itself; in the dark theme the header is a surface step with the gold star, because a saturated pine band would overpower a dark page. The gold star sits on pine in the light header and on surface-alt in the dark header; the star is decorative beside the wordmark text, and the wordmark carries the meaning.

2C. Palette discipline
- Ratio of use: roughly 60% neutrals, 30% pine family, 10% gold and clay combined. Why: the 60-30-10 balance is what keeps a page calm and the hierarchy obvious.
- No rainbow category colors. Categories share one chip system (Section 8); a different hue per category creates a dozen new contrast pairs to fail and reads as kitsch.
- Pale-tint background plus dark text of the same hue family (the VA.gov alert pattern) is the only approved way to build status colors — never saturated fill plus white small text.

3. TYPOGRAPHY — ONE FAMILY, SIZED FOR THIS AUDIENCE

3A. The font decision (and the honest budget)
The standing instruction allows "system fonts or one small web font at most." This spec uses exactly one family and keeps the total font weight at roughly 60 KB or less:

- Primary plan: Public Sans, self-hosted, three static weights (Regular 400, Semibold 600, Bold 700), Latin subset, WOFF2 only. Typical Latin-subset WOFF2 statics run about 15–25 KB per weight, so the set lands around 45–60 KB total, cached after the first page. Why Public Sans: it is the U.S. Web Design System's typeface, designed for civic legibility with a large x-height and distinct letterforms, and it was built to sit optically close to system fonts — which means the fallback text occupies nearly the same space before the font loads, so pages do not jump. It reads as established and civic without reading as "federal," especially in the warm palette of Section 2. Libre Franklin is an acceptable substitute (same Franklin Gothic heritage, more newspaper character); choose one family, never both.
- Loading behavior: body text uses font-display "optional" (on a slow rural connection the browser keeps the system fallback for that visit instead of swapping mid-read — no flash, no shift); headings and buttons use "swap." Preload exactly one file: the Regular weight. Why: preloading several font files competes for bandwidth and can make the first screen slower, not faster.

- Self-host, do not use the Google Fonts CDN. Why: the site's files are same-origin, so no extra connections; no visitor address is sent to Google (which fits Charles's safety-first stance); and the old "shared cache" advantage of the CDN no longer exists because browsers partition caches per site. Name the files with a version (for example public-sans-latin-v1.woff2) since GitHub Pages does not allow custom cache headers.
- Zero-font fallback (acceptable, 0 KB): if font files ever become a problem, drop to the system stack alone — system sans for everything, with Georgia serif reserved for the hero headline and section headings. In the Section 2 palette this still looks designed. The fallback stack, in order: Public Sans, -apple-system, "Segoe UI", Roboto, "Helvetica Neue", Arial, sans-serif.
- Optional character upgrade (not required): a single static display weight of Fraunces (about 30 KB) for the hero headline and section headings only, body remaining as above. This spends the font budget on headings instead of body text. Only with Charles's approval, and never the full four-axis variable file, which runs over 200 KB.

What not to do: do not ship two full families, do not ship a variable font file unsubset (a full variable file can exceed 300 KB), and do not set the root font size to a fixed pixel trick — the root stays at the visitor's own setting (100%) so phone large-text preferences scale the whole site, which WCAG requires to survive at 200%.

3B. Type scale (mobile-first; sizes in rem with px equivalents at the standard 16px root — the visitor's setting governs)

Role	Size	Weight	Line height	Tracking	Used for Display	2.5rem (40px), growing to 3.25rem (52px) on wide screens	700 (600 in dark)	1.05	−0.01em	Her
H1	2rem (32px), to 2.5rem on wide screens	700	1.15	−0.01em	Page titles, one per page
H2	1.625rem (26px), to 2rem (32px) on wide screens	700	1.2	0	Section headings

Why these sizes: research on readers over 55 converges on 18–20px as the comfortable body range (studies of readers over 60 found even 14pt challenging in timed reading); 16px is the general web floor and is used here only for secondary lines. Body line height 1.6 sits in the 1.5–1.8 comfort band and also survives the WCAG text-spacing test, which requires no clipped or lost content when a visitor's tools set line height to 1.5×, paragraph spacing to 2×, letter spacing to 0.12×, and word spacing to 0.16× — so no text container anywhere may have a fixed height; boxes grow.

3C. Writing-in-type rules (how text is set, site-wide)

- Left-aligned, never justified. Why: justification creates uneven word-spacing "rivers" that slow older readers.
- Sentence case for headings and buttons ("Get directions," not "Get Directions" and never all-caps blocks). All-caps is reserved for 1–3 word eyebrow labels, with the wide tracking above. Why:
  all-caps measurably slows multi-word reading.
- No italics for informational text, no light (300) weights anywhere.
  Why: both read as lower contrast to aging eyes.
- Line length for reading text: 45–75 characters, capped at 70ch on article and about pages; cards naturally run shorter.
- Numbers that people dial or drive to (phone numbers, hours) are never letterspaced and never shrunk below 16px.
- Links inside paragraphs are underlined, not color-only. Why: color alone fails color-vision-deficient visitors and is a WCAG requirement, not a preference.

4. SPACING, GRID, CORNERS, AND SHADOWS
4A. Spacing scale (the only spacing values on the site)
Base unit 4px, used as multiples; every margin, padding, and gap must be one of these steps. Why: a fixed 4/8-based scale is the industry-standard way to make spacing decisions disappear — rhythm comes from consistency, not from any single value, and off-scale values (13px here, 20px there) are the most common reason a page "looks off" without anyone knowing why.

Token	Value	Typical use
space-1	4px	Icon-to-label gaps inside badges space-2	8px	Gaps between lines inside a card; list-item gaps space-3	12px	Chip padding, tight card groups space-4	16px	Card padding (phone), grid gaps (phone), page side padding (phone) space-5	24px	Card padding (desktop), grid gaps (desktop), gaps between groups space-6	32px	Space below section headings; desktop page gutters
space-7	48px	Section band padding (phone); space above section headings space-8	64px	—
space-9	96px	Section band padding (desktop is 72px; 96 reserved for the hero's bottom and major breaks)

Two rhythm rules: (1) internal ≤ external — the space around a group must be at least the space inside it, or groups blur together;
(2) spacing lives on containers (grid/flex gap), not on margins of individual items, so adding or removing a card never breaks a page.

4B. Page grid and breakpoints
- Content container: max-width 1120px, centered; side padding 20px on phones, 32px from 900px up. Why 1120 and not wider: directory content is text and cards; a wider measure makes lines too long and cards too sparse, and 1120 keeps three card columns comfortable.
- Reading pages (news, about, resources text): text column capped at 70ch inside the same container.
- Card grids: one column on phones; from 640px, columns of at least 280px each (auto-fill), gap 16px phone / 24px desktop.
- Breakpoints consolidate to three content-driven widths: 640px

(cards become a grid; hero type steps up), 900px (desktop header links replace the bottom nav; section padding steps up), 1200px (container reaches max width; display type reaches top step). The site's existing 33 breakpoints can migrate toward these three plus component-level exceptions. Why: fewer, named breakpoints are how a hand-maintained stylesheet stays consistent.
- Section bands: padding 48px top/bottom on phones, 72px from 900px.

4C. Corners and shadows
- Radii: small 8px (inputs' inner elements, small tags), medium 12px (logo boxes, buttons, inputs), large 16px (cards, hero search pill is fully round at its height), pill 999px (chips, badges), hero/CTA band panels 24px.
- Shadows (light theme only): cards on the paper background get a two-part soft shadow — 0 1px 2px at 6% black plus 0 4px 16px at 6% black, tinted with the text color's hue. Sticky header gets its shadow only once the page has scrolled (0 2px 12px at 12%). Dark theme: no shadows at all; lighter surfaces and borders do the work (Section 2B). Why: shadows on dark backgrounds are invisible and just cost paint time; elevation-by-lightness is the standard dark-mode substitute.

5. HOMEPAGE LAYOUT AND THE HERO
==========
Section order, top to bottom, with the rule that the band sequence alternates background tints (Section 9) and every band opens with the same header pattern (eyebrow → H2 → one-line lede → content):

1. Header (Section 6).
2. Conditions strip (36–40px tall): today's date, current Hanceville conditions from the weather source already ordered, in info colors on a surface-alt band. When the National Weather Service has an active watch or warning for Cullman County, the strip switches to the warning pair, states the warning in plain words, and links to Cullman County EMA. Why: this site has a safety role for the county; a calm strip that turns serious only when it must is trusted more than a permanent alarm.
3. Hero — search-first (spec below).
4. Trust strip: one line of counts in words — "1,074 listings · 14 categories · Every link checked by hand · Run by Charles Adams of Hanceville" — plus the month listings were last checked. Why: specific, checkable facts build more trust than badges or slogans, and the directory's hand-checked accuracy is its real difference from Google.
5. Browse by category: 8–12 tiles (the full list lives on the Categories page). Tile: 32px icon above a 17–18px label with the listing count beneath ("Restaurants — 42"), minimum tile height 96px, grid of 2 columns on phones, 4 on desktop, gap 16px. Icon plus words, never icon alone — recognition over recall.
6. Spotlight band (tinted): Business of the Week panel (logo at grid-card size, name, one line, its embedded latest post below or beside) and a "New in Town" row of up to four compact cards with the gold New badge.

7. This week in Cullman County (events): a countdown line to the next event ("Next up: Friday Night Football — in 2 days"), then the next three events as list rows (date block, name, town, one line), each with Add to Calendar; "See all events" link after. List rows, not cards — the USWDS "Collection" pattern is cheaper to scan for dated items.
8. From Charles's pages (tinted): the embeds of Hanceville Entertainment & Shopping and Cullman County Meme Factory, side by side on desktop, stacked on phones, lazy-loaded per the performance rules.
9. School and community strip: during the school year, closings, delays, and lunch menus from the schools' own pages, each item linked to its source; out of season or on a quiet day, this band shows the latest three local news items in Collection rows instead. A band that has nothing true to say shows news, never stale items.
10. Browse by town: a simple wrapped row of town links (name + count), 18px, each a minimum 48px tap target — Hanceville, Cullman, Good Hope, Holly Pond, Fairview, West Point, South Vinemont, Baileyton, Garden City, Colony, Dodge City, Crane Hill, and the rest of the county's communities as listed.
11. Register band — the one high-contrast band on the page: full pine background, white H2 "Own a business or run an organization here?", one sentence, and a gold button ("Add or update your listing") with near-black text. Why only one dark band: a single high-contrast moment is what makes a call to action stand out; two would compete and halve the effect.
12. About blurb: three or four sentences, human and specific — who runs the site, why, and that listings are free and checked — with Charles's name; a photo only if Charles provides one of himself or of Hanceville.
13. Footer (Section 10).

The hero, specified

- Pattern: search-first, not photo-first and not split. The split hero is rejected: it collapses awkwardly on phones and reads as software marketing, not civic. A full photo hero is rejected as the base because text contrast over photos is unreliable and the photo pushes search down; instead the photo is the backdrop with a controlled overlay (below).
- Background: one real photograph of Hanceville (Main Street, the courthouse square in Cullman, or the Bulldogs stadium), compressed WebP at most ~180 KB, with a pine overlay gradient over the whole image — from rgba(22,58,44,0.88) at the top to rgba(22,58,44,0.66) at the bottom — so white text passes contrast at every point. If no suitable photo exists yet, the hero is solid primary-hover pine with the gold star watermark at low opacity in a corner; a clean typographic hero beats a wrong photo.
- Contents, in order: gold star mark (40px) above the headline on phones, beside it on desktop; Display headline "Shop Local Hanceville"; one line in 18–20px: "Every business, church, and service in Hanceville and Cullman County — checked by hand."; today's date in small text; then the search.
- Search: a white pill (surface), fully rounded, height 60px, containing a search icon, an input at 18px (16px absolute floor), and a pine Search button inside the right end (min height 48px). Placeholder shows an example, not an instruction: "Try 'barber,' 'plumber,' 'church…'". Below it, popular searches as four chips (Restaurants, Auto Repair, Churches, Hair & Nails), each a 48px tap target.

- Size: min-height 420px on phones (about 62svh, using svh so phone browser toolbars do not cause jumps), 520px on desktop, padding 48px sides-20 top/bottom on phones, 72/80 on desktop. Never a forced full-viewport (100vh) hero — it would bury the categories that are the site's second screenful, where most attention lives.
- One primary action only in the hero: the search. No second button competing with it.

6. HEADER AND NAVIGATION

6A. Sticky header

- Height: 56px on phones, 64px from 900px. Background and text from the header tokens (Section 2). Contents: star tile (32px) plus wordmark "Shop Local Hanceville" (20px, weight 700) at the left, linked home — always top-left, never centered (research finds home is about six times harder to reach with a centered logo). At the right: a Search icon-button, the theme toggle (sun/moon), and a Menu button explicitly labeled "Menu" with its icon. Every control is a minimum 44×44px target, 48px preferred.
- Behavior: the header hides when the visitor scrolls down and reappears on any scroll up (the current standard sticky pattern); it carries no shadow at the top of the page and gains the soft header shadow once scrolling starts, so it reads as floating only when it is. Anchor jumps and keyboard focus must never land hidden beneath it: pages carry a scroll top padding of 76px.
- From 900px: the Menu button gives way to inline word links — Directory, Events, News, Resources, About — at 16px, weight 600. The Search button and theme toggle stay. Why both patterns: hiding all navigation behind a menu button roughly halves how easily visitors find it (NN/g), so wide screens show the words; phones keep Search visible because search is this site's main door.
- Desktop "Browse" panel: on wide screens the Directory link may open one grouped panel — three headed groups (Eat & Shop / Services & Home / Community), 6–8 links each, everything visible at once with no scrolling inside it. On touch devices this same content is the Menu page with the groups as stacked sections and links at least 48px tall — never hover behavior on touch.

6B. Bottom navigation bar (phones only — the highest-value addition in this document for thumb use)

- Four items, no more: Home · Categories · Search · Events. Each is a 24px icon above a 13px label — icon and words always, never icon alone. Bar height 64px plus the phone's safe-area inset. Background: surface with the decorative border on top (surface-alt on dark).
- Active state: the icon sits in a 56×32px pill filled with gold-bg (light) or surface-raised (dark), the label turns primary and weight 700 — a filled shape plus weight plus color, never color alone.

- The Search item does not open a new page; it takes the visitor to the directory search field and focuses it.
- Hidden from 900px up. Page content carries bottom padding of 80px plus safe-area on phones so the bar never covers footer text or a focused element. Why 4 items and the bottom: 3–5 items is the established range for bottom bars, the bottom of the screen is the thumb zone on large phones, and this audience should never have to stretch to a top corner for the main doors.

6C. Breadcrumbs and back
- Category and listing pages only, never the homepage: below the header, above the H1, left-aligned — Home › Categories › Restaurants — with separators drawn by styling (not typed characters), the last item plain text marking the current page, exposed correctly to screen readers (a labeled nav with a list and the current page marked).
- On phones the trail collapses to its parent: "‹ Categories." Why: phone users expect a back step, desktop users expect a trail; serving each the pattern they expect is the professional norm.

6D. Filters and search results chrome
- Filters are visible chips (Section 8), not dropdown menus: discoverability beats compactness for this audience. A sticky chip rail sits under the header on directory pages (single row, sideways scroll, gentle fade at the right edge).
- A live result count always shows ("42 places"), and when any filter is active, a "Show all" reset is visible beside it, and the active filters are named in words in the results line — the same line that announces results to screen readers (a polite live region). Why: residents must always know how much is left and what is filtering it; mystery filters are the top cause of "the site has nothing" confusion, which Section 11 handles when it is real.

7. THE LISTING CARD — THE SITE'S CORE COMPONENT
==========

7A. List card (default; phones and directory pages)
- Layout: horizontal. Logo box at the left, content to its right, action row across the full width beneath. Card padding 16px; gaps 8px between lines, 16px before the action row.
- Logo box: 72×72px square, radius 12px, padding 8px, object-fit contain (never cover — cropping a logo destroys it), backing #FFFFFF in the light theme and surface-alt in the dark theme (many logos are drawn for white; the backing keeps them legible in dark mode). The box's space is always reserved (fixed size plus aspect ratio) so cards never shift while logos load.
- No logo on file: show the Register Now graphic in the same box —

it is the honest signal Charles chose — never a generic stock icon, and never a made-up monogram in a random color. (If Charles later wants a softer fallback, a monogram tile — the organization's initials at 20px/700 in primary on gold-bg — is the only approved alternative, and it must be all-or-nothing across the site.)
- Name: 20px, weight 600, the card's one link, up to two lines.
- Category · Town line: 14px, weight 500, text-muted (verified against both card backgrounds), with the category first.
- Status line: the Open Now / Closed badge (Section 8) plus today's hours in 16px — "Open Now · Closes 6 p.m." — computed from the visitor's clock per the standing feature order.
- Description: 16px body-small, maximum two lines, plain words.
- Address line: 16px with a 16px map-pin icon; the whole line is the directions link where an address exists.
- Favorite heart: 44px icon-button at the card's top right, outline heart becoming filled gold when saved, with a text label for screen readers ("Save [name] to My Saved Places").
- Action row: three buttons, each minimum height 48px, equal visual weight order — Call (primary filled; it is the action most visitors came for), Directions (secondary outline), Website or Facebook (secondary outline; label says which). On the narrowest phones the three sit in one row at 15–16px labels; if a card has no website, the third button is absent rather than disabled-looking. Why this order and restraint: card research is consistent that one primary action plus quiet secondaries makes the decision easier; four loud buttons make it harder.
- The whole card is never one big link (nested buttons inside a link break screen readers and keyboard use). The name is the link; buttons are separate.

7B. Grid card (from 640px, where a grid is used — Spotlight, New in Town, town pages)
- Vertical: logo box 96×96px (same construction), name, category · town, status, two-line description, action row of Call + Directions icon-and-label buttons. Padding 20px, grid gap 24px.
- If a listing has a real photo (Section 12), in grid cards only it may appear as a 4:3 image at the card's top with the logo box overlapping its bottom-left corner by 16px — the photo is scenery; the logo remains the identity. List cards never carry photos; the list must stay fast to scan.

7C. Card surfaces
- On the paper background: surface fill, 1px border, soft shadow.
- On a tinted band: surface fill, 1px border, no shadow. Never both treatments mixed on one page.
- In dark mode: surface fill, 1px border, no shadow, in both cases.
- A card never changes color on hover in a way that carries meaning; hover may deepen the border to border-strong and lift the shadow one step on devices with a mouse. Touch devices get no hover states at all.

7D. The Facebook embed slot (visual spec for the ordered feature)
- Sits inside the card under the action row, full card width.

- Until it loads, it is a reserved box (minimum height 180px) in surface-alt with a centered label — the page's picture/name from the snapshot treatment and "Latest post from Facebook" in 14px — so the page does not jump when the embed arrives.
- Per the standing performance rule it loads only when the card nears the screen or the visitor taps a "See latest post" button (a secondary button, full width, 48px); the reserved box is that button's resting state where tapping is the chosen pattern.
- The embed never covers the name, logo, phone, or directions, and never autoplays sound — both already standing orders; this spec adds only that its frame takes the card's radius (16px, clipped) so it looks built-in rather than pasted on.

8. BUTTONS, CHIPS, AND BADGES
==========
8A. Buttons
Every background color token ships with its paired foreground token (on-primary, on-secondary); a button rule names the pair, never an assumed white. Why: when a dark theme lightens the primary, white text silently fails — paired tokens make the failure impossible.

Style	Fill	Text	Border	Use
Primary	primary	on-primary	none	The one main action of a card/section (Call; Search; Register submit)
Secondary	surface (transparent on bands)	primary	2px primary	Directions, Website, Facebook, See lates
Tertiary	none	primary, underlined on hover/focus	none	"See all," footer links styled as actions, low-
Gold (rare)	accent gold	#1F2420 near-black	none	Only on the pine Register band and the hero's popular

- Geometry: minimum height 48px, padding 14px vertical / 22px horizontal, radius 12px, label 16px weight 600. One primary action per card and per section — never two filled primaries side by side.
- States: hover uses primary-hover; active uses primary-active;
  focus shows the 3px focus ring with 2px offset on every style, with no exception and no "outline: none" without the ring;
  a button that cannot act is not shown (no disabled-looking buttons for missing data — the element is absent instead).
- Labels: verb-first, sentence case, at most four words ("Call now," "Get directions," "View hours"). Why: labels a resident can predict beat labels they must decode.

8B. Filter chips
- Pill, min height 48px, padding 12px vertical / 16px horizontal, label 15px weight 500. Unselected: surface-alt fill with the border-strong border and text-colored label. Selected: primary fill, on-primary label at weight 700, and a check icon before the label — selection is shown by fill and weight and icon, never color alone, and the state is exposed to assistive tech (pressed state).
- Chips never use fixed heights (the WCAG text-spacing test must not clip them); they wrap to two lines of rails rather than shrinking.

8C. Badges (at most one marketing badge per card — status is not marketing and does not count against the limit)

Badge construction for all: 13px weight 600 text, padding 4px 10px, pill radius, pale-tint background with dark text of the same hue family, an icon or dot plus words — never color alone, never saturated fill with white small text (a documented AA failure pattern at 13px).

Badge	Light pair	Dark pair	Content
Open Now	success-text on success-bg, green dot	success pair (dark)	"● Open Now · Closes 6 p.m."
Closed	error-text on error-bg, hollow dot	error pair (dark)	"■ Closed · Opens 8 a.m." — always with the
New in Town	text on gold-bg, ★ before words	text on gold (dark) or gold-text on gold-bg	"★ New in Town
Spotlight	on-primary on primary, ★	on-primary on primary (dark)	"★ Spotlight"

Why one marketing badge maximum: badge research (Baymard) shows badges stop working when most items carry one; short, familiar, self-explanatory words ("New") outperform campaign language.

9. SECTION RHYTHM — HOW LONG PAGES STAY CALM

- Bands alternate: paper background → surface-alt tint → paper → … with exactly one pine high-contrast band per page (the Register call to action). A band change always means a topic change: never split one topic across two bands, never put two topics in one band.
- Every band opens identically: eyebrow label (13px, uppercase, gold-text, tracking +0.08em — e.g., "BROWSE," "THIS WEEK," "FROM OUR PAGES") → H2 → a one-line lede at 18px, max 60 characters per line width → content → an optional "See all →" tertiary link below the content at the left, as a 48px target. Why identical openings: the repeated rhythm is what makes a long page feel calm and designed rather than assembled; it is the single most imitated trait of the exemplar civic sites in Section 14.
- Between two bands of the same tint (rare), separate with space alone (48px) plus at most a single 1px rule in the border color — never a rule and a shadow and a color change together.
- Directory pages keep their own rhythm: sticky chip rail, result count line, then cards at a 16px gap (24px desktop), with the count updating as filters change.

10. FOOTER

The footer is a recovery surface, not a legal afterthought: it serves the visitor who reached the bottom without finding what they wanted, so it repeats the doors (search and categories), not just fine print. Background footer-bg (deep pine) with footer-text in both themes.

- Top of footer: a one-line prompt — "Still looking?" — with a "Search the directory →" tertiary link in gold-text and a link to All Categories.
- Four grouped columns on desktop, stacked in the same order on phones (no accordions — visible beats clever for this audience):

  1. Brand and contact: star tile + wordmark, one-line mission, town and county, a real tap-to-call phone and tap-to-email address, links to Charles's Facebook Pages.
  2. Browse: All Categories, Restaurants, Churches, Services, Events, News, Browse by Town.
  3. For businesses: Register or Add Your Business, Update Your Listing, How listing works, Spotlight information.
  4. About and help: About this directory, How listings are checked, Accessibility, Privacy, Contact, Sitemap.
- Column headings: 13px eyebrow style in gold (dark-theme gold-text).
  Links: 16px, min-height 44px rows on phones, footer-text at full strength (never the washed-out gray of typical footers — the classic 12px gray footer fails this audience outright; 14px is the absolute floor, used only in the bottom bar).
- Bottom bar: "© 2026 Shop Local Hanceville · Made in Hanceville, Alabama · Listings checked October 2026 · Back to top ↑" — with Back to top as a real link in the bar. On wide screens (900px+, where there is no bottom nav) a floating back-to-top button may also appear after ~600px of scrolling: 48px circle, surface fill, border, arrow-up icon. On phones the bottom-bar link is the only back-to-top, so it can never collide with the bottom navigation.
- The footer's pine is the same in both themes, which anchors the brand at the end of every page; check footer link pairs at 4.5:1 on #163A2C before shipping (off-white on deep pine passes comfortably; muted tones on it are the risk).

11. EMPTY STATES, THE 404 PAGE, AND LOADING STATES
An empty state has a job: say why it is empty, what belongs there, and the next step — in that order, understandably even if the illustration never loads. Shared visual anatomy: a centered column, max width ~50ch; a 48px icon (Section 12 set) inside a 96px surface-alt circle; H2 at 26px; one or two sentences at 18px; one primary button; then quiet alternatives. Never error-red, never a bare "0 results," never a joke as the only explanation.

- No search results: heading echoes the query — "No matches for 'barbr' in Hanceville & Cullman County." Then, in order: one "Did you mean 'barber'?" suggestion if a close match exists (one, not five); a spelling/shorter-word tip with an example; a primary button "Clear search and show everything"; if filters are active they are named in the text ("…with 'Open Now' and 'Hanceville' on") with a "Clear filters" action; three popular category chips; and a quiet line: "Still stuck? Contact us — or ask to add a listing." The whole block is announced to screen readers as it appears (a polite live region), and the result count line reads
  "No places found" rather than "0."
- Empty category ("No nail salons listed in Hanceville yet"):
  state plainly that nothing is listed yet, show the nearest alternative (the same category in the nearest town that has it, or a related category), and put the Register call to action here — an empty category is the highest-value place on the site to invite a listing, because the person who can fill it is likely looking at it.

- Empty events: "Nothing scheduled this week — next up is [event] on [date]," with that event shown and a "Submit an event" link. Never a blank calendar grid.
- 404 page (replacing GitHub's default, per the audit):
  in-style, star mark, H1 "That page isn't here," one sentence, the site search box (same hero search construction), three popular category chips, and a "Back to the homepage" primary button. Friendly and brief; no apology paragraph.
- Loading states: images and embeds reserve their boxes (Sections 7A/7D), so loading is shown by the reserved surface-alt box itself — no spinners for content. Where a brief wait is unavoidable (weather strip), show the strip's final shape in surface-alt with no text rather than a spinning indicator.

12. ICONS, THE STAR MARK, AND PHOTOGRAPHY

12A. The icon system — one professional family (Lucide, plus one sanctioned exception)

Charles asked specifically for professional, high-quality icons for the tab bar and listing actions, the way the big professional sites do it: one family, one weight, instantly recognizable. This section replaces every emoji-style glyph and every mixed one-off inline icon on the site (the audit found the favicon is a star emoji; the same ad-hoc approach must not survive anywhere else). A page is not finished if two icon styles appear on it.

The five free sets, honestly compared

Set	License (free for this use?)	Size & style	Verdict for this site
Lucide	ISC — free, commercial use, no attribution required	~1,700 icons, 24px grid, 2px stroke, round cap
Tabler Icons	MIT — free, no attribution required	~6,100 icons, same 24px grid and same 2px stroke as Luci

Production rules — so the whole site looks like one family
- One grid, one stroke: every icon is drawn on the 24px grid with a 2px stroke at every display size (never thin the stroke at small sizes — instead, never show a stroke icon below 16px, and navigation/action icons are always 24px). Round caps and round joins everywhere; fill is none except state fills named below.
- Color: icons take the color of the text beside them (currentColor) — one color per icon, from the Section 2 tokens.
  No multicolor icons anywhere. The only two-tone graphic on the site is the brand star tile (Section 12B).
- Sizes and padding (fixed): 16px inline beside small text; 20px inside buttons; 24px in the tab bar, header, and card actions; 32px in category tiles, centered inside a 64px surface-alt circle so every tile's icon weighs the same; 48px in empty states. Icon buttons are 44–48px squares with the 24px glyph centered — the glyph never crowds the edge. Icon-to-label gap is 8px in buttons and tabs, 4px inside badges (spacing scale, Section 4).

- Labels are part of the icon system: every tab-bar and category icon carries a visible word under or beside it (labels follow the Writing & Voice file, Part 03 — plain words, sentence case). An icon that acts completely alone (theme toggle, favorite heart) still gets a screen-reader label. Why: icons are a second language for this audience, never the only one — recognition over recall.
- State fills: the favorite heart fills with currentColor when saved; the tab-bar active state is the pill treatment from Section 6B (the glyph itself does not change); selected filter chips use the check glyph. No other filled variants.
- Verify at build time: icon names below are Lucide's current names (Lucide occasionally renames — "house" was "home," "triangle-alert" was "alert-triangle"; old names remain as aliases). If any named glyph is missing from the current Lucide release when the bot builds, take the Tabler equivalent of the same metaphor — never substitute a different metaphor and never draw a one-off.

Mapping — navigation and chrome (all Lucide)

Place	Label shown	Icon name	Notes
Bottom tab bar	Home	house	The front-door glyph everyone knows
Bottom tab bar	Categories	layout-grid	A grid of squares reads as "all the kinds"
Bottom tab bar	Search	search	Magnifier; also the header search button and the hero search field
Bottom tab bar	Events	calendar-days	Calendar with day dots reads as a schedule
Header	Menu	menu	Always beside the word "Menu" (Section 6A)
Header	(toggle)	sun / moon	Theme toggle; screen-reader labeled
Anywhere	Close / clear	x	Menus, the search field's clear button
Directory	Back to top	arrow-up	Section 10
Cards/pages	Next / more	chevron-right	"See all" links
Menus	Expand	chevron-down	Grouped menu sections

Mapping — categories (all Lucide; tile = 32px glyph in the 64px circle, label under it, per Section 5)

Category (label)	Icon name	Why this metaphor
Eat	utensils	Fork and knife — the universal "food here" sign
Shop	shopping-bag	A shopping bag reads as retail to everyone
Churches	church	A church building with a cross — literal, not abstract
Services	wrench	One tool = "someone who fixes things"
Outdoors	trees	Pine trees for parks, lakes, and the county's woods
Sports	trophy	Scores and school sports (Bulldogs included)
Resources	heart-handshake	Help and care, in one kind picture
Events	calendar-days	Same glyph as the Events tab — one meaning, one icon
Also on this site: Hair & Nails	scissors
Also on this site: Auto	car
Also on this site: Schools	graduation-cap
Also on this site: City & County	landmark	A columned building = government

Mapping — listing actions (Lucide unless noted)

Action (button label per Part 03)	Icon name	Notes
Call	phone	The classic handset — the most recognized glyph on the site
Directions	route	A path between two points reads as directions better than an arrow alone ("navigation" i
Website	globe	The world's shorthand for "their website"
Facebook	brand-facebook (Tabler)	The one sanctioned exception: Lucide carries no brand marks. Same 24px g
Hours	clock	Beside the status line (Section 7A)
Save / Favorite	heart	Outline when unsaved, filled when saved (Section 7A)
Share	share	The iPhone-style share glyph (box with rising arrow) — most residents carry iPhones
Search	search	In fields and buttons
Menu	menu	See chrome table

Where an icon must NOT be used

- The brand star is not an icon. In the header, hero, footer, and favicon it is the drawn brand mark of Section 12B — a logo, produced once as artwork. (The Lucide "star" glyph is approved only inside the Spotlight/New badges, at badge size, per Section 8.)
- A business's identity is never an icon. Listings show the organization's real logo or real photo (Section 7); a category glyph must never stand in for a missing logo — the Register graphic is the only fallback.
- The hero is a photograph (or the clean pine treatment), never a giant icon.
- Numbers and words carry facts. Weather temperatures, hours, and counts are text; icons only accompany them.

12B. The star, made real (fixes the audit's favicon finding)

- Draw the brand mark once as a vector: a gold star (filled, the Lucide star shape filled with the accent token) centered on a pine rounded square (corner radius ~22% of the tile), the star occupying about 62% of the tile.
- Produce the icon set from it as real files: favicon.ico (16/32/48px), an SVG favicon, apple-touch-icon at 180px, and app icons at 192px and 512px (the 512 with extra padding inside the tile for maskable cropping). Header/footer use the SVG at 32/36px; the hero uses it at 40px.
- The star also appears, sparingly, as the Spotlight/New badge glyph (Section 8) and as a low-opacity watermark in the solid-pine hero fallback (Section 5). Nowhere else — a mark repeated everywhere stops being a mark.

12C. Photography direction

- Real places only: Hanceville and Cullman County storefronts, streets, churches, fields, and stadiums, sourced per the imagery work in this upgrade (with credits where a photographer is known — a 13px muted credit line under standalone photos).

- Treatment: photos are never filtered into sepia or heavy saturation; the only sanctioned overlay is the hero's pine gradient (Section 5) and a subtle bottom gradient on grid-card photos if text ever sits on them (it normally does not).
- Card photos (grid cards only, Section 7B): 4:3, object-fit cover, radius matching the card's top corners, compressed WebP sized to the display box (never the original file), width/height set so the layout never shifts.
- Alt text: the organization's name plus "logo" for logos (standing rule); for photos, a short true description ("Main Street, Hanceville, looking north") — never keyword stuffing.

13. MOTION — A SHORT, STRICT BUDGET

- Allowed: hover/focus color changes at 150ms ease-out; expand/collapse (embed reveal, menu panel) at 200ms ease-out; one gentle fade-and-rise (8px, 300ms, once) as cards first appear — and that one only for visitors who have not asked for reduced motion.
- Forbidden: carousels and auto-advancing anything, parallax, scroll-jacking, animated backgrounds, looping animation of any kind, autoplay video with sound. Why: each is either a documented vestibular risk, a performance cost, or hostile to scanning — and none of them is what "professional" means to this audience.
- Reduced motion: when the visitor's phone requests it, transitions and animations are effectively removed (durations ~0), smooth scrolling is off (anchor jumps are instant), and content is fully visible in its resting state — the calm version is the base design, and motion is only ever layered on top for those who allow it. Smooth scrolling anywhere on the site exists only under the no-preference setting.

14. VISUAL ACCESSIBILITY GUARDRAILS AND VERIFICATION

These are pass/fail checks for whoever builds from this spec:
- [ ] Every text/background pair in Section 2 verified in a contrast checker on its actual surface, both themes; body pairs at 4.5:1 minimum, headline pairs at 3:1 minimum, interactive borders and the focus ring at 3:1. (Low-contrast text is the single most common failure on the web — found on 79.1% of top home pages in the WebAIM Million 2025 report — and the easiest to prevent at the token stage.)
- [ ] Every tappable element ≥48px tall/wide (44px absolute floor for header icon buttons), with ≥8px separation.
- [ ] Focus visible on every interactive element: 3px ring in the focus token, 2px offset, never suppressed; focused elements never hidden under the sticky header (scroll padding 76px) or the bottom nav (body bottom padding set).
- [ ] Text survives 200% zoom and the WCAG text-spacing overrides with nothing clipped or overlapping (no fixed-height text containers anywhere, chips and badges included).
- [ ] Content reflows at 320px wide with no sideways scrolling.

- [ ] Meaning never by color alone (status badges, selected chips, active nav all carry a non-color cue).
- [ ] Heading order is semantic and sequential (one H1, H2 per band, H3 inside), sentence case, in both themes.
- [ ] Dark theme checked pair by pair (no inverted shortcuts); heading weight step-down applied if headings look heavy.

15. EXEMPLARS — WHAT TO BORROW, WHAT TO AVOID

- GOV.UK / its design system — radical plainness as professionalism: semantic headings, sentence case, generous legible type, one thing per page. Borrow the discipline wholesale.
- U.S. Web Design System (USWDS) — the component vocabulary (Header, Card, Collection rows for news/events, Breadcrumb, Footer) and the token method behind Section 1–2, including its graded color scales that make contrast predictable.
- Boston.gov — organize by what a resident is trying to do (Eat, Get It Fixed, Worship, Get Help) rather than by business legal type, with a welcoming, human tone.
- Findhelp — the directory interaction model at national scale: one search field, two ways forward (category steps or keyword), relevance sorting with an obvious alternative, a save/share action on every card. The closest functional cousin of this site.
- Town of Occoquan, Virginia — the small-town proof: one great local photo, a restrained palette on white, distinctive type, sticky menu, and very fast loading is the design. One great photo plus restraint plus speed, at Hanceville's exact scale.
- Cullman Area Chamber of Commerce — the local benchmark residents already know: match its contact prominence (phone, address, email easy to find) and beat it where phones are concerned (search-first entry, Open Now, one-tap Call/Directions on every listing).
- Visit California — modular pacing: one Spotlight unit reused across home, category, and town pages, and no dead ends — every page offers a next step ("More like this nearby").
- Avoid as models: Yelp/Google card density (it leans on reviews, ratings, and map infrastructure this site does not have — borrow their card field order only) and experimental award-show sites (scroll-jacking, hidden navigation, and custom cursors are actively hostile to this audience — borrow their typography and spacing discipline only).

16. BUILD ORDER (DESIGN ITEMS ONLY)

1. [ ] Tokens: primitives + semantic tokens for both themes (Sections 1–2); components moved onto semantic tokens.
2. [ ] Star icon set produced and installed (Section 12B); favicon.ico answers 200.
3. [ ] Type: Public Sans statics self-hosted (or the zero-font fallback), type scale applied, input floor 16px (Section 3).
4. [ ] Spacing/radius/shadow tokens applied; container and three breakpoints in place (Section 4).

5. [ ] Header + bottom nav + breadcrumbs per Section 6.
6. [ ] Card rebuild to Section 7 (list and grid), including the embed slot's reserved box.
7. [ ] Buttons/chips/badges rebuilt to Section 8 with paired tokens.
8. [ ] Homepage re-banded to Section 5's order and rhythm rules.
9. [ ] Footer rebuilt to Section 10.
10. [ ] Empty states + 404 to Section 11.
11. [ ] Motion pruned to Section 13's budget; reduced-motion pass.
12. [ ] Section 14 checklist run in full, both themes, before anything is called finished.
13. [ ] Icon migration: every emoji-style or mixed icon replaced by the Section 12A set and mapping; the evenness pass run against Section 17's checklist.

17. EVENNESS AND ALIGNMENT STANDARD — "EVERYTHING MATCHES UP" (added at Charles's request)
Charles's requirement, in his words: the whole layout must "match up evenly." This section turns that into rules a builder can apply and a checker can verify. Evenness is treated as a defect class: visible misalignment found in any scan is reported and fixed like a broken link, under the standing scan rules.

17A. One rhythm, everywhere
- Every vertical and horizontal gap on every page is a step of the Section 4 spacing scale. There are no other numbers. If a layout "needs" an off-scale value, the layout is wrong, not the scale.
- Text rhythm: body copy sits on the 18px/1.6 line (a 28.8px line box); gaps above headings are space-7 (48px) and below them space-5 (24px) inside bands, identically in every band, so section openings march down the page at the same beat (see also Section 9's identical band openings).
- Page furniture is the same height on every page: header 56/64px, conditions strip 36–40px, bottom bar 64px + safe area. No page may grow or shrink the furniture.

17B. Cards: equal heights, aligned working parts
- Equal heights per row. In any grid row, all cards are the same height (the grid stretches them; the card is a vertical flex column). A shorter listing never leaves a shorter card.
- Pinned action row. Inside every card, the action row (Call / Directions / Website) is pushed to the card's bottom (margin-top: auto on the row inside the flex column), so the buttons form one straight horizontal line across the whole row, no matter how long each description runs.
- Reserved text blocks make the parts above the buttons line up too: the name block reserves exactly two lines (2 × 20px × 1.3 = 52px) whether the name takes one line or two; the status line reserves one line at badge height (28px); the description reserves exactly two lines (2 × 16px × 1.55 ≈ 50px), truncating with an ellipsis beyond two. Category · Town is always one line.

Result: reading a row of cards, the eye travels along straight lines — logos, names, statuses, descriptions, buttons.
- List cards (single column) follow the same reservation rules, so consecutive cards are near-identical in height; a card with no photo and no embed is the standard height, and a card with an expanded embed grows downward only — it never widens or shifts its neighbors.
- Logo boxes are identical in every card (72px list / 96px grid, Section 7) and top-aligned; photo areas are identical 4:3 in every grid card that has one. A card without a photo has no photo-shaped hole — the logo area simply takes the top; grid rows therefore mix photo and no-photo cards only within the same category page section, grouped photo-first, so a single row never mixes the two shapes. (Simpler approved alternative: photos appear only in Spotlight and New in Town, keeping directory rows perfectly uniform.)

17C. Alignment rules for the rest of the page
- Left edge discipline: on any page, the header wordmark, band eyebrows, H2s, ledes, card grids, and footer columns all start on the same container edge (Section 4B). Nothing is indented by a different amount for variety.
- Band headers are pixel-identical in structure (Section 9): same eyebrow size, same H2 size, same two gaps. Two bands placed side by side in a screenshot must be indistinguishable in their top 120px except for words and colors.
- Chips and tabs: every chip in a rail is the same height (48px minimum, content may grow it but never shrink it); the four bottom-tab items are exactly equal quarters of the bar's width, icons centered over labels; header icon buttons are identical 44px squares.
- Buttons: every button of the same style on a page has the same height (48px) and the same icon-to-label gap (8px); a row of card buttons shares one baseline (17B).
- Detail tables (hours, contact blocks on listing and resource pages): the label column is one fixed width (96px) so all values start on a single vertical line; row padding is space-2 (8px) throughout; no table mixes alignments.
- Forms (Register and event submission): labels above fields, every field full width at 48px height (text areas taller by whole line multiples), one field per row, error text space reserved under each field so the form never jumps when an error appears.
- Numbers align: counts in tiles, prices or dates in event rows, and hours in status lines use tabular figures where the font offers them, so columns of numbers do not wobble.

17D. Evenness verification checklist (run with the Section 14 checks, both themes, at 360px and 1280px widths)
- [ ] Screenshot a grid row: a straight horizontal line touches the top of every action row in the row; a second line touches every card's bottom edge at the same pixel.
- [ ] All logo boxes in the screenshot measure the same pixels; all photos share one aspect ratio; no image is stretched.

- [ ] Name, status, and description blocks start at the same heights in every card of the row (measure two cards).
- [ ] Two different section bands have identical top structure (eyebrow → gap → H2 → gap → lede) within 2px.
- [ ] Stylesheet audit: search the CSS for pixel values; every spacing value found is on the Section 4 scale (borders, radii, and icon sizes excepted, per Sections 4C and 12A).
- [ ] Bottom bar: four equal quarters; active pill centered on its icon; header identical height on three different pages.
- [ ] Chips in the filter rail share one height; wrapped second-row chips match the first row exactly.
- [ ] In the dark theme, repeat the card-row and band checks — geometry must not move when colors change.
- [ ] At 200% zoom, rows still align (cards may stack, but stacked cards keep identical internal geometry).

SPEC 02_ux_accessibility.md

02 — User-Friendliness (UX) and Accessibility
Shop Local Hanceville — https://shoplocalhanceville.github.io/
Research prepared October 19, 2026, for the bot that builds and maintains the site.
Area covered: mobile-first UX for a local directory, designing for older adults, search and filter UX, navigation, call/directions prominence, trust signals, WCAG 2.2 AA essentials on a static site, form design, and reducing cognitive load.
No code in this file — every item is written as a buildable specification.

Who the audience is, and what that demands
Most visitors are small-town Alabama residents on phones, and many are older.
Design research on older adults is consistent: vision, hearing, and fine motor control decline with age, so small type, low contrast, and tiny tap targets — merely annoying to younger users — become hard barriers for older ones (Nielsen Norman Group: https://www.nngroup.com/articles/usability-for-senior-citizens/?lm=define-techy-words-ol NNGroup's measured testing found seniors' task success rate far below younger users' on typical websites, with more errors and slower completion — meaning every simplification below is worth real users, not polish (https://www.nngroup.com/articles/usability-seniors-improvements/?lm=dark-mode&pt=article).
The W3C Web Accessibility Initiative (WAI) found that older users' needs — larger text, high contrast, clearly identified links, clear headings, good orientation — largely match WCAG requirements (https://www.w3.org/WAI/presentations/ageing/waiage and https://uxpamagazine.org/older-users-online/).
Build rules for this site, in one sentence: big text, big buttons, plain words, one thing at a time, nothing that moves or disappears, and a human way out of every dead end.

What the live site already does well (verified October 19, 2026 — keep all of this)
From the prior feature audit (~/workspace/your_files/Website_Feature_Audit.md) and a fresh read of the live home, businesses, and directory pages:
- Plain, friendly language throughout ("Tap to call, email or get directions").

- Emergency help (911, and call/text 988) stated plainly near the top of the home page and repeated lower down.
- Tap-to-call and tap-to-email links (17 of each in the code), plus Google Maps/directions links on listings.
- An honest identity line on the home page: "Hanceville Entertainment & Shopping is an independent community page. It is not the official Chamber of Commerce and is not run by the City of Hanceville."
- Dark/light theme toggle that remembers the choice; 111 ARIA attributes; responsive layout; cross-site search with filters and sorting; sitemap and robots files present; fast hand-written pages (about 92 KB before data).
- Search hint text already speaks the user's language: "Search by name or service, or tap a category."

Gaps observed on the live site that the items below address
- Directory listings are rendered by script; if the script or a data file fails to load, a listing page can appear nearly empty with no explanation.
- The "Want your business featured? It's free" pitch sits above the listings on the businesses page — the recruitment message competes with the visitor's actual job (finding a business).
- There are 13+ top-level pages (city, departments, council, events, eats, shops, businesses, news, nonprofits, resources, directory, wallace, fun) — too many for an older visitor to hold in mind as a flat list.
- No business hours anywhere yet, so no "Open Now" answer — the second most common question a directory gets, after the phone number.
- No custom 404 page, no back-to-top control on long pages, no share button on listings, no favorites, no text-size control (all carried over from the audit; each is specified below in UX terms).

MUST — do these first

Readability for older eyes

M1. Set a large, honest type scale and never go below it.
Body text is at least 17 CSS px everywhere; nothing readable is ever set smaller than 16 px (form inputs included — inputs under 16 px also trigger automatic page zoom on iPhones, which disorients older users). Listing names are at least 20 px and bold. Line height at least 1.5 for paragraphs, with a clear space between paragraphs. Text is left-aligned (never justified), in a plain sans-serif font, sentence case for headings and buttons, and italics are not used for body text or instructions.
Why: small, light type is the single most repeated complaint in older-user research, and WAI lists appropriate text size and readability as core needs.
Sources: https://www.w3.org/WAI/presentations/ageing/waiage ; https://www.nngroup.com/articles/usability-for-senior-citizens/?lm=define-techy-words-old-users&pt=article

M2. Text must survive enlargement without breaking the page.
A visitor who sets their phone or browser text to 200% loses no content and no function, and at phone width (320 CSS px) nothing requires side-to-side scrolling to read a line or tap a button. Test both before calling any page finished.
Why: many older users rely on enlarged text; pages that clip or overlap at 200% are unusable to exactly the people this site serves.

Source: WCAG 2.2 criteria 1.4.4 Resize Text and 1.4.10 Reflow —
https://www.w3.org/WAI/WCAG22/Understanding/

M3. Meet contrast minimums in BOTH themes, and never use color alone.
Every piece of normal text has a contrast ratio of at least 4.5:1 against its background, in the light theme and the dark theme separately; large text (headings 24 px+, or 19 px+ bold) at least 3:1. Button borders, icons, form field outlines, and the focus outline reach at least 3:1 against what is next to them. Links inside sentences are underlined, not distinguished by color only. Status is never shown by color alone: "Open Now" is a green badge that also says the words "Open Now" (and "Closed" says "Closed"), so a visitor who cannot distinguish red/green still gets the answer.
Why: contrast sensitivity declines with age; WAI specifically warns that blue-but-not-underlined links are indistinguishable from body text for many older people, and color-only status fails color-blind visitors.
Sources: https://www.w3.org/WAI/presentations/ageing/waiage ; WCAG 2.2 criteria 1.4.3 Contrast (Minimum), 1.4.1 Use of Color, 1.4.11 Non-text Contrast — https://www.levelaccess.com/blog/wcag-2-2-aa-summary-and-checklist-for-website-owners/

Tap targets and motor control

M4. Make every tappable thing big, with room around it.
Call and Directions buttons are at least 48 px tall and span an easy width. Category tiles, filter choices, navigation items, and the theme and menu controls are at least 44 px in both dimensions, with at least 8 px of space between neighboring targets. Nothing interactive is smaller than 44 px anywhere on the site, even where a smaller target would still pass the legal floor. Pad the tappable area rather than enlarging icons.
Why: WCAG 2.2 AA sets only a 24 px floor (criterion 2.5.8), but Apple recommends 44 pt and Google Material 48 dp minimums, and motor-control research is explicit that aging users and anyone with arthritis or tremor need the larger size to succeed on the first tap.
Sources: https://ixdf.org/literature/article/how-to-use-tappability-affordances ; https://www.siteimprove.com/blog/motor-impairments-and-mobile-ui-the-touch-target-problem/ ; WCAG 2.5.8 — https://getwcag.com/en/wcag-2-2-checklist

M5. No gestures beyond the tap.
Nothing on the site requires swiping, pinching, double-tapping, press-and-hold, or dragging to reach content or operate a control. Any future map must also offer plain buttons (zoom in, zoom out, and a list view of the same places). No fly-out or hover menus — menus open on tap and stay open until the visitor taps again or moves on.
Why: WAI's older-user research flags fly-out and pull-down menus as a known difficulty for users with fine-motor problems, and WCAG 2.2 AA requires a single-tap alternative to any dragging (criterion 2.5.7).
Sources: http://www.w3.org/WAI/EO/Drafts/sites-older-users/Overview-100602.html ; https://getwcag.com/en/wcag-2-2-checklist

Navigation and orientation

M6. Shrink the visible navigation to a few plain-word choices, in the same place on every page.
Group the 13+ pages into a short set of plainly named sections shown in the same order, same wording, and same position on every page: Home; Businesses & Shops; Food; City Hall & Services; Events; News; Help & Resources;

Schools & Wallace State. Page titles use the exact same words as the tile or menu item the visitor tapped to get there. Every page carries a one-line orientation cue under its title saying what the page is for (the site already does this well — e.g., "Tap a phone number to call" — make it universal).
Why: consistent, predictable menus and links are a named requirement in WAI's older-user guidance; seniors get lost when a link's label and the destination page's title disagree. Consistent navigation and consistent identification are also WCAG criteria 3.2.3 and 3.2.4.
Sources: https://www.w3.org/WAI/presentations/ageing/waiage ; https://www.nngroup.com/articles/define-techy-words-old-users/

M7. Always offer more than one way to find a business.
A visitor can reach any listing three ways: the search box, browsing by category tiles, and browsing the alphabetical full directory. A "Browse A–Z" page lists every business name as a large tappable row.
Why: WCAG criterion 2.4.5 (Multiple Ways) aside, older visitors who distrust search — or cannot spell a name — fall back to browsing; nobody should have to win at search to use a directory.
Source: WCAG 2.4.5 — https://www.w3.org/WAI/WCAG22/Understanding/

M8. Put help in one consistent place.
The footer contact block ("Got a question…? Call / Email") appears in the same position on every page, in the same words, including on the 404 page and on any page whose content failed to load.
Why: WCAG 2.2's Consistent Help criterion (3.2.6) exists because people look for help where they found it last time; a community directory's human escape hatch is a core feature, not decoration.
Source: https://www.levelaccess.com/blog/wcag-2-2-aa-summary-and-checklist-for-website-owners/

Search and filters that never strand a visitor

M9. One obvious search box, everywhere it matters, with an example inside it.
A single search box appears near the top of the home page and at the top of every directory listing page, at least 48 px tall, with a visible label ("Search businesses and services") and example text in the field such as "Try 'pizza', 'haircut' or 'plumber'". The button says "Search" in words (a magnifier icon may accompany it, never replace it).
Why: a labeled box with a concrete example teaches the feature to visitors who have never used site search; icon-only search is a known failure point for older users.
Source: https://www.algolia.com/fr/blog/ux/best-practices-for-site-search-ui-design-patterns

M10. Make search forgiving: everyday words, partial words, and small misspellings still find the right place.
Matching ignores capitalization; finds names containing the typed letters (typing "barb" finds the barber); tolerates common one- and two-letter misspellings ("restrant" still finds restaurants — offer the closest matches rather than nothing); and understands a built-in everyday-word list: food, eat, hungry, dinner → restaurants (Eats); hair, haircut, nails, salon → barbers and beauty; fix car, mechanic, tires, oil change → auto repair; doctor, clinic → health; church, worship → churches; bank, ATM, money → banks and credit unions; gas, fuel → gas stations; groceries, store → grocery and retail; medicine, pharmacy, drugs → pharmacies; help, food bank, assistance → Help & Resources; school, college → schools and Wallace State. Keep this word list in the site's data so it can grow when real failed searches show up.

Why: visitors describe needs in everyday words, not business categories; synonym mapping is the standard fix for searches that technically "worked" but found nothing.
Source: https://blog.expertrec.com/wordpress-search-not-found-message/ ; https://www.algolia.com/fr/blog/ux/best-practices-for-site-search-ui-design-patterns

M11. Design the "nothing found" answer as carefully as the results.
When a search or filter combination finds nothing, the page never shows a blank area or a bare "No results found." It shows, in this order: (1) a friendly line naming what they typed — "We couldn't find anything for 'barber shop' in Hanceville"; (2) if a close match exists, a big tappable "Did you mean…?" suggestion; (3) the category tiles so they can browse instead; (4) a "See everything A–Z" button; (5) the human escape hatch — "Can't find it? Call us and we'll help" with the tap-to-call contact. Any active filters on a zero-results page are listed in words with one big "Clear all filters" button.
Why: a dead-end results page is the moment older visitors conclude "this site doesn't work" and leave; recovery content placed immediately — not below a scroll — is what keeps them.
Source: https://www.alfdesigngroup.com/post/best-practices-for-website-search-design ; https://searchanise.io/blog/how-to-fix-the-no-results-page/

M12. Say how many results, in words, and announce it politely.
Above every results list, plain text: "7 places found for 'pizza'." When filters change the list, the count updates. The count is also announced to screen readers (an ARIA live region that does not move focus or interrupt).
Why: a count tells scanning visitors the size of the job ahead, and WCAG 4.1.3 (Status Messages) requires exactly this kind of update to reach assistive technology without stealing focus.

M13. Keep filters few, big, and impossible to get lost in.
On directory pages, filters are limited to Category and Town, presented as large tappable chips or buttons (not dropdown lists where avoidable — a dropdown hides choices and demands precision). The chosen filters stay visible as words above the results ("Showing: Food · Hanceville") with a "Clear" control beside them. Sort control offers plain options: "A to Z" (default), "Closest first" only if distance data ever exists. Changing a filter never reloads the visitor to the top of a different page or wipes their search text.
Why: every added filter multiplies the chance an older visitor lands on an accidental empty page and cannot reconstruct how they got there; visible state plus one-tap reset is the error-tolerant pattern.
Source: https://www.alfdesigngroup.com/post/best-practices-for-website-search-design

Listing cards and the two big jobs: Call and Directions

M14. One fixed card layout, in the same order, on every listing everywhere.
Each listing card contains, top to bottom: (1) logo or photo; (2) business name — the largest text on the card; (3) category in plain words ("Barber shop", "Auto repair"); (4) Open Now / Closed badge with today's hours, once hours data exists (see M16); (5) street address in plain text; (6) a row of two large buttons: "Call (256) 555-0123" — with the number written inside the button — and "Directions"; (7) smaller text links for Website and Facebook. Nothing essential hides inside an accordion, tab, or "read more" — extra description may expand, but name, category, address, phone, and hours are always fully visible. Every card on the site follows this same order.

Why: older visitors scan linearly and learn one pattern; identical card structure turns the second business they look up into a task they already know. Predictability and consistency are explicit WAI older-user requirements.
Source: http://www.w3.org/WAI/EO/Drafts/sites-older-users/Overview-100602.html

M15. Every printed phone number is itself the call link.
Wherever a phone number appears as text anywhere on the site — cards, detail pages, city offices, resources — the number is a tap-to-call link, not just a number next to a separate call icon. The same for email addresses and addresses (an address is a directions link). Link wording always says what will happen ("Call", "Get directions", "Email"), and no link anywhere says only "click here" or "read more" without naming its destination (the story link pattern "Read the full story" gains the story's title for screen readers, e.g., "Read the full story: [headline]").
Why: hunting for the one tappable element among look-alike text is a top frustration for low-vision and motor-impaired users, and WCAG 2.4.4 requires each link's purpose to be identifiable.
Sources: WCAG 2.4.4 — https://www.w3.org/WAI/WCAG22/Understanding/ ; https://www.nngroup.com/articles/usability-for-senior-citizens/?lm=define-techy-words-old-users&pt=article

M16. Answer "Is it open?" on the card, once hours data exists.
Each business card shows today's hours in plain form ("Open today 8 AM–5 PM") and, beside them, the Open Now / Closed badge from M3. If hours are unknown, the card says "Hours not listed — call to check" rather than guessing or leaving a silent gap.
Why: after the phone number, hours are the question a directory exists to answer; an honest "not listed" beats a blank that reads as an error.

Error tolerance and things that move

M17. If a list fails to load, say so and offer a retry — never show an empty page.
Every script-loaded listing area has a fallback state: if the data does not arrive within a few seconds, the area shows "This list didn't load. Check your connection and tap Try again." with a large Try again button, plus the footer contact block. The same applies to the live scores area on the home page.
Why: on rural connections, silent failure reads as "the site is broken"; a plain explanation plus one big retry turns a dead end into a two-second detour. (Observed on the live site: listing pages depend entirely on script rendering, so this state currently does not exist.)

M18. Nothing moves, refreshes, or disappears on its own.
No auto-playing carousels or sliders. The home page's live scores block may update its numbers, but it must never shift surrounding content, move the visitor's place on the page, or take focus; updates are quiet and the visitor's scroll position is sacred. No pop-ups, no timed banners, no content that vanishes after a few seconds. Any moving element gets a visible pause/stop control.
Why: unexpected movement and disappearing targets are disproportionately disorienting for older users and users with attention or vestibular issues; WCAG 2.2.2 (Pause, Stop, Hide) requires control over anything that updates automatically.

M19. Forgiving everywhere: back always works, nothing punishes a wrong tap.
Every control does what its label says; the browser Back button always returns the visitor to the same list, same scroll position, same search and filters they left. Tapping a wrong category is undone by one tap on the persistent navigation — no state is ever more than one tap from reset. Favorites (when built) are added/removed with one tap and give a brief visible confirmation ("Saved to My Saved Places") instead of silently changing.
Why: error tolerance — cheap recovery from mistakes — is a named pillar of older-user usability; fear of "breaking something" is a real reason seniors abandon sites.
Source: http://www.w3.org/WAI/EO/Drafts/sites-older-users/Overview-100602.html

Forms — the email signup and the Register / Update form

M20. Labels above fields, always visible, in plain words.
Every field has a permanent label above it in the same large type as body text ("Your business name", "Phone number customers can call", "Your email address"). Placeholder text is used only for a short example, never as the label. Each field that needs a format shows an example under its label ("Example: 205 Main Street"). Fields are grouped in a single column, inputs are at least 48 px tall, and the form uses the right keyboard for each job (telephone keypad for phone, email keyboard for email, with autocomplete for name/email/phone so the phone can fill them).
Why: placeholder-as-label forces users to hold the instruction in memory while typing — exactly the short-term-memory burden older-user and form research warn against; grouped fields, examples, and obvious required markings are WAI's form guidance for older users.
Sources: https://staff.admin.ox.ac.uk/ux/forms ; https://getaccessguard.com/posts/accessible-forms-how-to-build-inputs-every-user-can-complete ; https://www.w3.org/WAI/presentations/ageing/waiage

M21. Required means the word "required," and almost everything is optional.
Instructions at the top say "Fields marked 'required' are the only ones you must fill in." Only name, category, and one contact method are required on the Register form; everything else is genuinely optional and says so.
No field demands an account, password, or sign-up of any kind.
Why: every extra required field costs completions, and older users abandon forms that feel like interrogations; WCAG 3.3.2 requires clear labels and instructions for what is expected.
Source: https://getaccessguard.com/posts/accessible-forms-how-to-build-inputs-every-user-can-complete

M22. Errors: keep everything typed, say what to fix in friendly words, in two places.
If submission fails: (1) nothing the visitor typed is erased; (2) a summary box appears at the top — "Two things to fix before this can send" — listing each problem in plain words, each item tappable to jump to its field; (3) a message in words (not color alone) sits with each problem field, saying what is wrong and how to fix it ("That phone number looks short — it should have 10 numbers"); (4) focus moves to the summary so keyboard and screen-reader users land on the explanation. No message ever blames the visitor, and no error appears while they are still typing a field — check on submit, or when they leave a field.

Why: this is the WCAG 3.3.1/3.3.3 pattern (identify the error, suggest the correction) and the strongest known defense against the form abandonment that hits older users hardest.
Sources: https://getaccessguard.com/posts/accessible-forms-how-to-build-inputs-every-user-can-complete ; WCAG 3.3.1, 3.3.3 — https://www.w3.org/WAI/WCAG22/Understanding/

M23. A real confirmation, and a human alternative beside every form.
After a successful Register submission, the page replaces the form with a plain confirmation: "Thank you — we got it. Charles reviews every new listing himself, and yours will appear once he has checked it. If we need anything else, we will contact you at [the address/number they gave]."
Right beside the form (not buried), the existing alternatives stay as first-class options: "Rather do this by phone or Facebook? Message us on Facebook or email shoplocalhanceville@gmail.com" — the businesses page already offers this path; keep it everywhere the form appears. No puzzle CAPTCHAs; if spam filtering is needed, use an invisible check that asks the visitor nothing.
Why: a confirmation that states what happens next converts anxiety into trust; some older users will not complete any web form, and the phone/Facebook path respects that without losing the listing. Puzzle-based verification is also what WCAG 3.3.8 (Accessible Authentication) steers designs away from.

WCAG 2.2 AA essentials for this static site

M24. Run this checklist on every page; all of it is achievable with plain HTML/CSS on GitHub Pages.
- One heading structure per page: a single page title (H1) matching the nav label, sections in H2, no skipped levels; headings describe what follows (2.4.6).
- A "Skip to main content" link as the first focusable element (2.4.1).
- Every image has text: logos and photos get alt text naming the business; purely decorative graphics get empty alt so screen readers skip them (1.1.1). The audit confirms logo alt text already exists — extend the same discipline to every photo added later.
- Visible keyboard focus everywhere: a thick outline (at least 2 px, high contrast against both the element and the page) on whatever has focus, and the focused element is never hidden behind a sticky header or footer (2.4.7, and 2.4.11 Focus Not Obscured — new in WCAG 2.2, directly relevant if a sticky bottom bar is ever added).
- Everything operable by keyboard alone, in a sensible order, with no keyboard traps (2.1.1, 2.1.2, 2.4.3) — including the theme toggle, search, filter chips, and favorites hearts.
- Page language declared (English), page titles unique and descriptive (2.4.2), and text spacing that survives user overrides without clipping (1.4.12).
- No images of text for information — hours, badges, and announcements are real text, so they can be enlarged and read aloud (1.4.5).

Why: WCAG 2.2 AA is the recognized standard U.S. courts and the W3C point to, and for this audience it overlaps almost exactly with "easy for my neighbors to use."

SHOULD — do these next

S1. Add a visible text-size control in the header.
Two or three large buttons labeled "A", "A+", "A++" (or "Text size: Normal / Large / Extra large") that step the whole site's text up and remember the choice, exactly as the theme toggle already remembers its choice. Many older users do not know their browser can zoom; a labeled control on the page is discoverable.
Why: WAI identifies "an ability to increase text size from the designer's setting" as an essential older-user need, and users rarely find browser settings on their own.
Source: https://www.w3.org/WAI/presentations/ageing/waiage

S2. Move the "get listed" pitch below the directory content on listing pages.
On the businesses page, the search box and category tiles come first; the "Want your business featured? It's free" block moves below the listings (and stays in the footer area), so a visitor's job is never behind a recruitment message. The pitch itself is warm and good — it is the placement that costs.
Why: the first screen of a directory page should serve the person looking for a business; owners looking to join will scroll, searchers who bounce will not come back.

S3. Show "Information checked on [month, year]" on every listing.
A small line on each card or detail view: "Information checked October 2026." The underlying directory data was in fact verified listing by listing in October 2026, so the line is true; update it whenever a listing is re-verified. Say, once, on the About/contact area: "Every listing is checked by a local person before it appears, and listings are always free — nobody can pay to be listed or ranked."
Why: for a community directory, dated verification and a no-paid-placement promise are the trust signals that distinguish it from scam listing sites — a live concern for this owner and audience — and they cost nothing.

S4. Keep the identity and safety block, and give it a permanent home.
The home page's honest line ("independent community page… not run by the City of Hanceville") and the emergency block (911 / call or text 988) are already right; make both permanent fixtures: the identity line in the footer of every page, and the emergency strip on the home page and the Help & Resources page in identical wording. Add one plain sentence naming who runs the site ("Run by Charles Adams of Hanceville through Hanceville Entertainment & Shopping") so visitors know a real local person stands behind it.
Why: named, local, accountable ownership is the strongest trust signal a community site can send, and consistent placement (see M8) is what makes it findable in a stressful moment.

S5. Favor text that loads instantly; treat every image as a cost.

On listing pages, the name, category, address, phone, and hours render as plain text first and are fully usable before any logo or photo arrives. Images carry fixed dimensions so the page never jumps as they load, and load lazily below the first screen. Set a working budget: a directory page should be fully readable within a couple of seconds on a weak 4G signal.
Why: this audience includes rural connections and older phones; layout that shifts while someone is aiming a finger causes mis-taps, and text-first rendering means the directory works even when images never arrive.

S6. Print-friendly resources pages.
The Help & Resources pages (food help, senior services, crisis lines) get a print stylesheet: black text on white, large type, phone numbers printed in full (never hidden behind a button), and the page's web address printed at the top. Many older residents — and the churches and agencies who hand out this information — still work on paper.
Why: carried over from the audit; for help information, the printed page on a refrigerator is a real interface of this site.

S7. Favorites with a plain name and a forgiving design.
When "My Saved Places" is built (already in the feature plan), label it in those words, not "Favorites" with a bare heart icon alone — the heart sits beside the words "Save" / "Saved". The saved list lives on the visitor's own device, says so in one line ("Saved on this phone only — no account, nothing sent anywhere"), and works without any sign-in. An empty saved page explains how saving works with one example.
Why: naming the benefit in plain words and promising no account removes the two reasons older users avoid such features — not understanding them and fearing a sign-up.

S8. A friendly, useful 404 page in the site's own style.
A wrong address lands on a page that says, in the site's voice: "That page isn't here" — followed by the search box, the category tiles, and the footer contact block. It keeps the site's header, theme, and navigation so the visitor never feels they left the site.
Why: GitHub's default error page is a dead end in a stranger's voice; a branded recovery page converts a typo into continued browsing (and the audit already flags its absence).

S9. Back-to-top on long pages, as a labeled button.
On pages longer than about three phone screens, a button labeled "Back to top" with an up arrow appears once the visitor has scrolled, sitting clear of other controls and never covering listing buttons. It must meet M4 sizes and never hide the element a keyboard user has focused (WCAG 2.4.11).
Why: long directory lists plus arthritis make scrolling back a genuine physical cost; a labeled button is discoverable where a bare arrow icon is not.

S10. One primary action per screen section.
Each home page section leads with at most one prominent button; secondary actions are text links. Sections keep generous white space and a visible heading, and no two competing banners or calls to action stack together.
Why: choice overload and visual competition raise cognitive load steeply for older users; the home page is content-rich (news, events, scores, resources, signup) and needs strict one-job-per-section discipline to stay calm.

NICE — when time allows

N1. Share button on each listing using the phone's own share sheet.
A "Share" button (icon plus word) on each card/detail view opens the device's built-in sharing (text, Facebook, Messages) with the business name, phone, and page link pre-filled; where the device has no share sheet, it copies the link and says "Link copied."
Why: older users share local finds with family constantly, and the native sheet uses an interface they already know from their phone.

N2. "Open in Maps" choice remembered.
Directions buttons open the visitor's preferred maps app (the standard Google Maps link already does this on most phones); nothing more is needed — listed only to say: do not build a custom map widget in place of it. If the planned map page is built, every pin must have the M5 list-view equivalent, and tapping a pin shows name, Call, and Directions — never information available only by dragging or hovering.
Why: familiar external tools beat novel in-site widgets for this audience.

N3. A short "How to use this site" page in plain words.
Three short sections with pictures of the actual buttons: "Find a business,"
"Call or get directions," "Save a place for later." Linked from the footer as "New here? How this site works."
Why: a small, permanent tutorial respects self-taught users (NNGroup found most seniors taught themselves the web) without forcing help on everyone.
Source: https://www.nngroup.com/articles/define-techy-words-old-users/

N4. Respect reduced-motion and sound settings.
If any subtle animation is ever added, the phone's "reduce motion" setting turns it off; nothing on the site ever plays sound automatically, including embedded videos, which start paused with a clear play button.
Why: vestibular sensitivity and hearing changes are common in this audience; silent, still pages are the safe default.

N5. Seasonal plain-language review.
Twice a year, re-read the site's labels and instructions aloud and replace any word a neighbor would not use ("directory" is fine; "resources" should always appear with a plainer companion, e.g., "Help & Resources," as the nav already plans). Ask two or three older residents to find a named business while someone watches, and fix whatever slows them down.
Why: NNGroup's core finding across two decades is that testing with actual older users finds what checklists miss; five minutes of watching beats any audit, and it costs nothing.

Quick acceptance test (give the bot this checklist)
On a mid-range Android phone and an iPhone, on the live site, confirm:

1. Body text measures at least 17 px; Call buttons at least 48 px tall; no interactive element under 44 px.
2. At 200% text size and at 320 px width, every page reads and works with no sideways scrolling and nothing clipped.
3. Text contrast passes 4.5:1 in both light and dark themes (free checkers: WebAIM Contrast Checker).
4. Searching "food", "hair", "restrant", and "barb" each returns sensible results; searching nonsense returns the M11 recovery page, never a blank.
5. Clearing all filters from a zero-results state takes exactly one tap.
6. With the data files blocked, a listing page shows the M17 message and a working Try again button.
7. The Register form: labels visible at all times; a bad phone number produces the M22 summary plus field message with all typed data intact; success produces the M23 confirmation naming what happens next.
8. Keyboard only: every control reachable, focus outline always visible, focus never hidden behind any fixed bar.
9. A screen reader announces the result count after a search (M12) and each card's name, category, and phone link in order (M14, M15).
10. Every page shows the same navigation order, the same footer contact block, and the identity line (M6, M8, S4).

3. The Listing Description Method (1–2 Sentences, Zero Fabrication)

3.1 The formula
A gold-standard listing description is 1–2 sentences, 15–35 words, built only from these slots, in this order:

> [What it is] + [one distinguishing verified fact] + [one useful detail].

- What it is — the category in plain words: "Family barbershop," "Independent pharmacy," "Locally owned grocery
- Distinguishing fact — the single most interesting verified item in the listing's data: a founding year, a s

3.2 The fact ladder (where facts may come from — nothing else)
1. The business's own website or Facebook page (services it lists itself, years it states itself).
2. Its Google Business listing details already captured in the Master Directory file.
3. The Directory file's own verified notes (e.g., "open since 2008," "next door to Hanceville Drug Co.").
Forbidden sources: memory, vibe, other directories' marketing blurbs, review snippets presented as fact, and an

3.3 Banned moves (each one is a fabrication risk)
- Unproven superlatives: "the best," "famous for" *(allowed only when the Directory file itself records it as t
- Invented services: if the data says "auto repair," the copy may not add "and 24-hour towing."
- Invented atmosphere: "cozy," " bustling," "friendly staff" — unverifiable; cut.

Researched October 19, 2026 for the Shop Local Hanceville professional upgrade.
Companion file: 04b_officials_portraits.md — official portraits of mayors, council members, chiefs, department heads, and county office holders.

Rules used for every asset below
- Every image URL was curl-tested on 2026-10-19 and returned HTTP 200 with an image content type. Test results are noted per asset.
- License/permission basis is recorded for every asset. CC BY and CC BY-SA photos are free to use with credit (author name given below) and, for BY-SA, share-alike on adaptations — a credit line in the site footer or on the page satisfies attribution; keep crops faithful (no misleading edits).
- DOWNLOAD, do not hotlink: save a local copy into the site repo (the bot

Towns with NO verified banner photo yet — and the honest route to one
No freely licensed photo of these towns was found on Wikimedia Commons (verified by category and search checks, 2026-10-19):
- Good Hope — route: the City of Good Hope's own website (goodhopeal.com) photos, under the project's use-to-identify rule; a wide officials group photo exists there (see 04b). Do NOT use the "Castle of Good Hope, Cape Town" photos Commons search returns — wrong continent (flagged in Section 5).
- South Vinemont — route: townofsouthvinemont.com's own photos (use-to-identify rule). No Commons photos exist.
- Dodge City — route: dodgecitytown.com's own photos (use-to-identify).
- Garden City — route: gardencityal.gov's own photos (use-to-identify).
  The single file in Commons' "Garden City, Alabama" category is misfiled junk — flagged in Section 5.
- Colony — no town website exists yet (announced as planned in 2026);
  interim route: Cullman County / Smith Lake imagery, or no photo banner (styled text banner) until the town site launches.
- Crane Hill — covered by the Clarkson Covered Bridge photos (the bridge park serves the Crane Hill/Bethel area) and Smith Lake photos, both verified above.

3. CATEGORY HEADER IMAGES
Real local photos are used wherever a verified one exists; generic stock is used only for Eat and Services, where no local Commons photo fits.

Eat — Southern fried chicken set (generic, license-clean)
- Image URL: https://upload.wikimedia.org/wikipedia/commons/2/2c/Fried-Chicken-Set.jpg
- Source page: https://commons.wikimedia.org/wiki/File:Fried-Chicken-Set.jpg
- License: CC0, by Evan-Amos — no credit required
- Dimensions: 5440 x 3760 | Curl test: 200 image/jpeg
- Alternate: chicken & ribs plate —

  CC BY 4.0, by Paul Lowry, 3060 x 4080, test 200 image/jpeg.
  Source: https://commons.wikimedia.org/wiki/File:Chicken_and_Ribs_Plate.jpg

Shop — REAL local: downtown Cullman street (same as Cullman alternate) https://upload.wikimedia.org/wikipedia/commons/7/76/300s_1st_Avenue_SE_Cullman_July_2012.jpg CC BY-SA 3.0, by Chris Pruitt, 1600 x 1200, test 200. A real Cullman main street beats any stock "shopping" photo. More of this series exists on Commons (1st/2nd/3rd Ave SE, 4th St SE — same author/license).

Services — barbershop (generic) + mechanic (generic)
- Barber shop interior: https://upload.wikimedia.org/wikipedia/commons/5/53/Barber_Shop_%28Explored%29_-_Flickr CC BY 2.0, by Jim Pennucci, 4221 x 2809, test 200 image/jpeg.

- Mechanic working on a raised pickup truck:

  CC BY-SA 4.0, by PattayaPatrol, 6048 x 4024, test 200 image/jpeg.
  Source page is the same filename on commons.wikimedia.org/wiki/File:.

Churches — REAL local: Ave Maria Grotto (CC0, HERO-A above) or the Shrine of the Most Blessed Sacrament (CC BY 2.0, Hanceville banner above).
Both are Cullman County landmarks; either works as the Churches header, with the other used on its town page.

Outdoors — REAL local: Smith Lake (HERO-D above), CC BY-SA 4.0 or the CC0 shoreline alternate. Clarkson Covered Bridge (HERO-B) is the second Outdoors option (county park, trails, creek).

Sports — Friday night lights, Alabama HS stadium (HERO section above), CC BY-SA 4.0, 8000 x 6000. See Section 4 for the honesty rule on captions.

Resources — REAL local: Cullman County Courthouse
- Image URL: https://upload.wikimedia.org/wikipedia/commons/5/5f/Cullman_County_Courthouse_May_2013_1.jpg
- Source page: https://commons.wikimedia.org/wiki/File:Cullman_County_Courthouse_May_2013_1.jpg
- License: CC BY-SA 3.0, by Chris Pruitt — credit required
- Dimensions: 1600 x 1200 | Curl test: 200 image/jpeg
- Placement: Resources header; also fits Government/County pages.

4. SCHOOL SPIRIT (Bulldogs / Bearcats) — what is lawfully usable
==
- Wikimedia Commons has no photos of Cullman Bearcats or Hanceville Bulldogs teams, stadiums, or mascots (searched 2026-10-19: zero results), and the schools' logos/mascot art are the schools' own marks — do NOT pull them from random websites, fan pages, or logo-download sites.
- LAWFUL ROUTES, in order:
  1. The schools' OWN official photos (Cullman City Schools / cullmancats.net, Cullman County Schools / ccboe.org, and the schools' official Facebook pages) used to identify the schools — the same use-to-identify + takedown rule the directory already runs on.
     Harvest specific photo URLs from those official pages at build time and record them in this file before use.
  2. Generic Alabama Friday-night imagery with a clean license (the Hewitt-Trussville stadium photo above, CC BY-SA 4.0) — ONLY with a generic caption like "Friday nights in Alabama." Never caption a photo of another school's stadium or team as Cullman or Hanceville.
  3. Charles's own game art: the Cullman County Gridiron posters Muse generated for Charles on 2026-10-18 (in ~/workspace/imagine_media/) are his to use for the game/sports pages — pixel-art style, clearly artwork, no licensing issue.
- DO NOT USE: Bearcat/Bulldog clip art or mascot images from logo sites, news photos (Cullman Times etc.) without permission, or any photo of an identifiable student from a source without a license basis.

5. FLAGGED — DO NOT USE (found during this hunt; wrong place or junk)
==
- "Castle of Good Hope" / "Cape of Good Hope pub" photos (Commons search results for "Good Hope Alabama") — Cape Town, South Africa, and Oxford, UK. Wrong places entirely.
- "Baileyton-...-tn1.jpg" series on Commons (Town Hall, Main Street, mountains) — that is Baileyton, TENNESSEE, not Baileyton, Alabama (Brian Stansberry's Tennessee set). The Alabama Baileyton photos are the "-al.jpg" series listed in Section 2.
- "West Point Lighthouse" photos and U.S. Military Academy material (Commons "West Point" results) — not West Point, Alabama.
- "Garden City Roller Mill, Minnesota" and "Welwyn Garden City" (UK) photos — not Garden City, Alabama.
- The one file in Commons category "Garden City, Alabama" ("Abortion Picture.JPG") is misfiled junk with no relation to the town.
- Smith Lake search noise: Meadowbank Farm photos (Monroeville, AL) and
  "MDW SMITH LAKE" (portrait orientation, unclear subject) — not used.
- Hanceville Commons material is thin: an Alabama National Guard photo (public domain) is the only category file — not a town scene; not used as a banner. The Shrine and Wallace State photos carry Hanceville.
- Any "freeimages.com" / aggregator result: license terms are murkier than Commons/Unsplash/Pexels and none were needed — none recorded.

6. BETTER AI-GENERATED LATER (and why)
These are graphics where consistency and brand fit matter more than photographic truth, and where no real photo should be faked:
1. Category icon set (Eat, Shop, Services, Churches, Outdoors, Sports, Resources, plus town/marker pins) — one consistent line-icon style in the site's navy/gold. AI (or free icon fonts) guarantees a matched set;
2. Social share art (og:image) — a designed 1200 x 630 card: site name, star mark, and a photo strip (built FROM the verified photos above). Design task, not a photo hunt.
3. Subtle background texture — a faint topographic/star pattern for page sections; must be abstract so it never pretends to be a place.
4. "No photo yet" placeholders for towns (Colony, South Vinemont, Dodge City, Garden City until their own-site photos are harvested) — styled text-and-pattern banners in the site theme, clearly graphic, never a fake photo of the town.
5. Gridiron/school-spirit art — Charles already owns AI pixel-art posters (2026-10-18); more in that style can be generated for sports pages instead of touching school logos or other schools' photos.
6. Map art — a simple stylized Cullman County outline map graphic for the map page header (drawn/generated; factual boundaries should be traced from the public-domain Census/NARA maps on Commons, which this hunt confirmed exist, rather than invented).

Credit line the bot should add (footer or About page)
"Photos: Ave Maria Grotto (CC0, AlabamaSouthern); Clarkson Covered Bridge and Cullman aerial and Smith Lake (CC BY-SA, Chris Light / Dave warren80 / Quintaped); Shrine of the Most Blessed Sacrament (CC BY, Fr James Bradley); Wallace State (CC BY-SA, Broiledcorn; public domain, mostateparks); Holly Pond and Fairview and Baileyton (CC BY, Brian Stansberry; Holly Pond Town Hall also public domain, Carol M. Highsmith, Library of Congress); West Point sign (CC0, Randall wx); Cullman downtown and Courthouse (CC BY-SA, Chris Pruitt); food (CC0, Evan-Amos; CC BY, Paul Lowry); barbershop (CC BY, Jim Pennucci); mechanic (CC BY-SA, PattayaPatrol); stadium (CC BY-SA, Cullen Steber). All via Wikimedia Commons." — keep this list in step if photos are swapped.

SPEC 04b_officials_portraits.md

04B — Official Portraits of Public Officials (Cullman County & all municipalities)
Researched October 19, 2026 for the Shop Local Hanceville professional upgrade.
Companion to 04_images_assets.md (places, banners, and category photos).

How this file is meant to be used
- One row per person: name, exact title, town/county, department, the OFFICIAL portrait image URL (from the official city/county website), the source page URL, and the office's official Facebook page URL where one exists — so each official's listing can show their portrait with their office's Facebook embed under it, the same as business listings.
- Every portrait URL was curl-tested on 2026-10-19; only URLs returning HTTP 200 with an image content type are listed as portraits. Test results are in each row.
- DOWNLOAD the portrait into the site repo; do not hotlink government sites.
- Portraits are the officials' own published photos on their government's own website, used to identify them in their official capacity. If any official or office asks for removal, remove it (same rule as logos).
- Where no official portrait exists, the row says "no official portrait found" — never substitute a news photo or a random image for these.

TOTALS
- Verified individual official portraits: 45 people (14 county, 25 Cullman city/Power Board/airport, 6 Hanceville) plus 2 town group photos covering 15 more officials (Good Hope 9, Dodge City 6) and 1 placement-identified clerk portrait (Dodge City).
- Already on disk locally: Hanceville's 5 council portraits (see Hanceville).
- Offices with no official portrait found: listed per jurisdiction below.

UPDATE NOTE: Mayor Bradford's portrait has been ADDED to the city site since the October 2026 website scan that found none — the Mayor's Office page now shows his formal portrait (an identical duplicate file is also posted on the

Hanceville offices with NO official portrait found
- Police Chief — the city website has NO police department page and names no chief anywhere (consistent with prior reporting that the Sheriff's Office temporarily handled Hanceville calls from February 2025). No portrait, and no name to record from the official site.
- Chase Maze, Water & Sewer Board Manager — named, but only the Water Board logo appears in his section; no portrait.
- Andrew Herron, City Attorney — named on the Mayor's Office page; no photo.

- Pictured, in order: 1 Corey Harbison (City Manager), 2 Rita Nicholas (City Attorney), 3 Christie Chamblee (City Clerk), 4 Taft Dillashaw (Council), 5 Jerry Bartlett (Mayor), 6 Greg Brown (Council), 7 Billy Brown (Council), 8 Susan Eller (Council), 9 Eric Phillips (Council).
- BOT NOTE: this is a GROUP photo — display it on the town's government listing as a whole; do not crop individuals out of it for personal portraits without Charles's approval (positions are known from the page's own left-to-right list if he ever wants crops).

7. SUMMARY FOR THE BUILD
- Officials WITH a verified official portrait ready to download: County 14, Cullman city 18 (+ Mayor's alternate), Power Board 5, Airport 2, Hanceville 6 (+ 5 council portraits already on disk), Dodge City clerk 1, plus 2 group photos (Good Hope 9 officials, Dodge City 6 officials).
- Every official's office Facebook page verified from the official websites is recorded above for the embeds (Commission, Revenue, Library, EMA, COA, City of Cullman, Cullman PD, Power Board, Airport, Hanceville citywide, Good Hope, Dodge City, Garden City, West Point). Not found: Sheriff's Office FB link on its site; Courts (no own page); South Vinemont, Holly Pond, Fairview town pages.
- Retest queue for the six-hour check: cullmancoa.com director.jpg (404), townofbaileyton-al.com (unreachable), Colony's promised town website.
- Full per-row research detail (exact long Google Sites URLs for the two library portraits, all test outputs, and visual-verification notes) is in ~/workspace/professional_upgrade/research/portraits_county.md,

SPEC 05_free_infrastructure.md

05 — Free Performance, SEO, and Professional Infrastructure

Research for Shop Local Hanceville (https://shoplocalhanceville.github.io/), a free static GitHub Pages site. Every option below is genuinely free at the stated tier, verified against vendor or official documentation in October 2026. Descriptive specs only; the bot applies them. Ordered by impact.

A note on honesty up front: several "free SEO tricks" circulating in 2026 are dead or don't apply to a US site on github.io. Those are flagged as catches so Charles doesn't spend effort on them.

PRIORITY 1 — Be found correctly by Google and Bing

1. Google Search Console (free, foundational)

- What it is: Google's free owner dashboard for a website: which searches bring visitors, which pages are indexed, indexing errors, Core Web Vitals field data, and structured-data reports. It is also the only way to submit the sitemap directly to Google.

- Setup for this site (Charles does this once, signed into his Google account; it cannot be delegated because verification proves ownership):
  1. Open Search Console and add a URL-prefix property for exactly `https://shoplocalhanceville.github.io/`.
  2. Verify ownership with the HTML file method: Google gives Charles a small file; the bot places it in the site's root folder (it is a public file in the Pages repo) and Charles clicks Verify. The HTML tag method (one meta line in the home page head) works equally well.
  3. In Search Console, submit `sitemap.xml` (the site already has one).
  4. Leave the verification file/tag in place forever; Google re-checks it.
- The catch: a Domain property is impossible here. Domain properties require DNS control of the domain, and Charles does not control github.io's DNS — GitHub does. URL-prefix is the correct and only route, and it covers this site completely because the whole site lives under the one prefix.
- What it buys: without it, Google indexes the site blind. With it, Charles can see the actual searches Cullman County people type, catch pages Google dropped, and confirm fixes. Zero cost, no code weight on pages.
- Sources: verification methods overview — https://learn.showit.com/en/articles/6150129-add-property-to-google-search-console ; HTML tag method — https://support.mydirigible.com/docs/guides/seo/set-up-google-search-console/

2. Bing Webmaster Tools (free, five minutes after step 1)

- What it is: Microsoft's equivalent dashboard for Bing. One click imports the verified site straight from Google Search Console — no second verification needed.
- Why it matters more than Bing's search share suggests: Bing's index feeds answers in Microsoft Copilot and other AI assistants Charles himself uses, so being correctly indexed there is part of being "found" in 2026.
- Also free with it: IndexNow support — a small key file placed in the site root lets the bot notify Bing (and other IndexNow engines) the moment pages change, instead of waiting for a crawl.
- Catch: none of substance. Same "never remove the key file" rule.

3. Structured data (schema.org) — what helps, and what no longer does

Machine-readable labels in each page that tell search engines exactly what each listing is. The bot generates them from the same verified directory data (name, address, phone, website, Facebook) already in the Master File. Rule carried over from Charles's accuracy standard: only fields that are verified may be marked up — never invent coordinates, hours, or ratings. Markup must match what a visitor sees on the page; Google treats hidden or invented markup as spam.

Worth doing:

- WebSite + Organization markup on the home page — states the site's official name ("Shop Local Hanceville") and its logo. This is how Google picks the correct site name and logo in results instead of guessing.
- ItemList of LocalBusiness entries on each town/category page — the page declares "this is a list, and here are the businesses," each entry a `LocalBusiness` (using the most specific subtype the data supports, e.g. Restaurant, Store, BeautySalon) with name, address, telephone, website URL, and `sameAs` pointing at the business's own verified Facebook or

  Instagram page. `geo` coordinates and `openingHoursSpecification` only where those values are already verified in the directory data.
- Event markup for the events listings (the site carries dozens of local events) — Event structured data is still a live Google rich-result type, and local events are exactly what nearby searchers ask for.
- BreadcrumbList on inner pages — cheap to add, helps Google display a clean Hanceville › Town › Category trail instead of a raw URL.

Honest catches (verified, October 2026):

- The ItemList carousel rich result is a beta limited to the EEA, Turkey, and South Africa. A US site is not eligible today, so the ItemList work above buys better understanding and future eligibility — not a guaranteed visual carousel in Google results. Anyone promising otherwise is selling something.
  Source: https://developers.google.com/search/docs/appearance/structured-data/carousels-beta
- FAQ rich results are dead. Google restricted FAQ dropdowns to authoritative government and health sites in August 2023 and removed the feature entirely on May 7, 2026. FAQPage markup is harmless but earns nothing in Google Search now. If the site adds an FAQ page, write it for human readers, not for a search bonus that no longer exists.
  Source: https://www.searchenginejournal.com/google-drops-faq-rich-results-from-search/574429/
- LocalBusiness markup on a directory page does not create a Google knowledge panel or map pin for the listed business. Map presence comes from each business's own Google Business Profile (below), not from Charles's markup. The markup's real value: Google understands the directory's contents precisely, which supports appearing for "near me" style directory queries.
- Validate every template once in Google's free Rich Results Test and watch the structured-data reports in Search Console after launch.

4. Google Business Profile — free, but not for the directory itself

- A Google Business Profile is the free listing that puts a business on Google Maps and in the local knowledge panel. It is for a business that serves customers, verified by Google.
- The directory site itself should not claim one — it is a website, not a storefront business at an address, and a mismatched profile risks suspension.
- The professional move Charles does control: the Register page (already specced) should nudge every registering owner to claim or check their own free Google Business Profile and keep its name, address, and phone identical to their directory listing. Consistent name/address/phone across the directory and Google's own records is a real local-visibility factor, and it costs every business involved exactly nothing.

5. Sharing cards (Open Graph / Twitter) — finish the job on every page

- Current state from the site audit: the home page has a complete tag set; inner pages carry only about four tags. Spec: every page gets the full set — title, description, canonical URL, type, and a 1200×630 sharing image — plus the matching Twitter/X card tags (`summary_large_image`).
- Use one branded share image built from Charles's own site artwork (his star brand mark), so shared links look like Shop Local Hanceville everywhere and no third-party photo rights are involved. Optional later:

  one per town, generated the same way.
- Free validation: Facebook's Sharing Debugger and any free Open Graph checker will show exactly what a shared link will look like before Charles posts it.

6. Sitemap and robots — already present; keep them honest

The site already has both files (verified live earlier). Best-practice maintenance, all free:

- The sitemap lists every public page — the full page count (36 pages including the story pages found in the re-scan, not the 21 first counted).
- `lastmod` dates reflect when a page actually changed, never bulk-refreshed to today; search engines learn to ignore dishonest dates.
- robots.txt stays permissive for search engines and ends with the sitemap line pointing at the sitemap's exact address.
- After any restructure, resubmit the sitemap in Search Console (and the IndexNow ping covers Bing automatically).

PRIORITY 2 — Speed: Core Web Vitals on a static site

7. The targets (Google's published thresholds)

A page "passes" when at least 75% of real visits meet all three:

Metric	What it measures	Good
LCP	Main content appears	≤ 2.5 seconds
INP	Page responds to taps/clicks	≤ 200 milliseconds
CLS	Content doesn't jump around	≤ 0.1

Source: https://rybbit.com/blog/core-web-vitals (thresholds as published by Google/web.dev). Measure free with PageSpeed Insights (lab test plus, once enough real Chrome visits accumulate, 28-day field data — a small local site may show "insufficient data" at first; that is normal, not a failure).

This site starts from strength: hand-written pages, ~29 KB home page, ~35 KB CSS, ~28 KB JS. The risks are images and embeds, not code bloat.

8. The GitHub Pages caching catch — and the service-worker answer

- Catch: GitHub Pages serves everything with `cache-control:
  max-age=600` (ten minutes) and does not allow custom HTTP headers at all — no long-lived caching, no security headers, can be set by the site owner. This is a platform limit, not a site defect.
  Sources: https://blog.codefarm.me/http-caching/ (captured Pages response headers) ; https://nitroide.com/blog/cloudflare-security-headers-recipe.html
- The free workaround is the service worker already specced in the feature list (installable web app item): on first visit it quietly stores the site's pages, styles, script, and logo files on the visitor's device; repeat visits then load almost instantly from that local copy regardless of GitHub's ten-minute header, and it checks for a fresh version in the background. Rules for the bot: version the cache, refresh it on every site update, never cache the Register form's submission traffic, and let pages fall back to the network if anything goes wrong.

- Keep file names stable for pages, and put a short version marker in the service worker that the bot bumps on each publish, so visitors never get stuck on a stale copy.

9. Page-weight techniques (descriptive spec for the bot)

- Hero/LCP image: the home hero photo gets priority treatment — it is the one image marked to load first and early (preload / high fetch priority). Every other image on every page lazy-loads as the visitor scrolls to it.
- Facebook embeds (the known heavy item — Charles chose embeds on every listing): each embed stays an empty, correctly sized placeholder until its listing approaches the screen, then loads. This is already in the Copilot/Grok instructions; it is also the single biggest INP/CLS protection the site has. Reserve each embed's exact space so nothing shifts when it arrives (CLS).
- Images and logos always carry their width and height (the normalized square logo canvas makes this automatic) so the layout never jumps.
- Fonts: prefer the device system font stack — zero downloads, zero layout shift, and it looks native on every phone. If a display font is ever adopted, it must load with a swap strategy (text shows immediately in a fallback, font swaps in) and be limited to one family, one or two weights, self-hosted in the repo (no third-party font CDN dependency).
- Scripts: keep the existing pattern — small, plain scripts loaded at the end or deferred. No frameworks, no tag managers, no chat widgets: each one is an INP and privacy cost with no benefit to a directory.

10. Free image optimization workflow for the 725-logo collection and photos

Current state: logos are already normalized to a uniform canvas with a web-ready set (about 11.8 MB total). The upgrade pass, all free:

- Formats: serve WebP as the default for photos and rendered logos (roughly 25–35% smaller than equivalent JPEG/PNG), with the existing PNG/JPEG as fallback through the standard picture-element pattern. AVIF is smaller still and fine as a progressive enhancement, but its encoding is slow and its edge behavior less predictable — treat AVIF as optional, WebP as the workhorse. Keep vector logos as SVG — they are already perfect at any size and tiny. Transparent logos keep PNG/WebP with transparency; never flatten them onto a guessed background color.
- Sizes: logos ship at the sizes actually displayed (a small card size and a 2× retina version), not the 1600-pixel master canvas — the masters stay in the archive folder, the site serves the small ones. Photos (hero, spotlight, listing photos) ship in a responsive set (about 480 / 800 / 1200 pixels wide) and the browser picks the smallest that fits the visitor's screen.
- Tools (all free): Squoosh (browser-based, by Google, nothing to install) for one-offs; a scripted batch pass using the free, open-source

  Sharp library or ImageMagick for the whole collection — run once by the bot locally or in a free GitHub Actions job (see item 12), with a target quality around 80 and a hard rule: verify a sample visually before replacing originals, and never overwrite the master files.
- Why it matters beyond speed: GitHub Pages has soft limits (repo size guidance around 1 GB, bandwidth around 100 GB/month). A lean image set keeps the site comfortably inside free forever.

PRIORITY 3 — Knowing when something breaks (free monitoring)

Context: Charles already has Muse's six-hour site check running. The options below complement it with independent, always-on coverage that does not depend on any AI session.

11. Uptime monitoring

- UptimeRobot free plan: 50 monitors, checks every 5 minutes, email alerts, one basic status page. More than enough to watch the home page and key town pages.
  - Catch, stated plainly: since December 2024 the free plan's terms limit it to personal, non-commercial use. Shop Local Hanceville is a free community directory with no sales, which fits the spirit of that tier, but Charles should read the plan terms himself before relying on it, and never build anything critical on a tier whose terms could change.
  - Sources: https://dev.to/r0tten0x/uptimerobot-free-plan-in-2026-the-limits-thatll-actually-bite-you-445g ;
    https://www.g2.com/products/uptimerobot/pricing
- StatusCake free plan (alternative): 10 monitors at 5-minute checks, commercial use allowed on the free tier; catch — the account must be logged into at least once every 90 days or it deactivates.
  Source: http://notifier.so/guides/statuscake-vs-uptimerobot/
- Either way: point monitors at the home page plus two or three deep pages, alerts to Charles's email. GitHub Pages itself is highly reliable; this is about Charles hearing it from a monitor first, not from a neighbor.

12. Automated broken-link checking in the repo (free, high value)

- What it is: a scheduled GitHub Actions workflow in the site's own repository running the free, open-source lychee link checker against the live site (via its sitemap) once a week, automatically opening a GitHub issue listing any dead links it finds.
- Cost: GitHub Actions is free and unlimited on standard runners for public repositories, and a Pages site repo is public. A weekly run of a few minutes costs nothing, forever.
  Source: https://www.codetalenthub.io/github-actions-free-tier/
- Catches, honestly:
  - GitHub disables scheduled workflows after 60 days of no repository activity; the site's normal updates reset that clock, but a quiet quarter could pause the checker silently. The six-hour Muse check remains the backstop.
  - Some sites block automated checkers and return 403 to bots (the directory already knows this class: SSA, Wallace State, and friends).

    The checker needs an allowlist for those known bot-protected domains so the report contains real breakage, not noise.
  - It checks links, not meaning: a hijacked domain that still returns a
    already has — link checking alone would call it "fine."

13. Free broken-link spot checks (no setup)

- Dead Link Checker / Dr. Link Check style web tools and the free W3C Link Checker: paste the site address, get a report. Fine for a one-off audit; the automated workflow in item 12 is the durable answer.
- Inside Search Console, the indexing report also surfaces pages Google itself found broken — free and already covered by item 1.

PRIORITY 4 — Decisions where "free" has a real trade-off

14. Visitor analytics — framed for a security-first owner

The site currently has none, which is a defensible position: nothing about visitors is collected at all. Search Console (item 1) already answers "what searches find us" without tracking anyone. Add analytics only if Charles wants page-level answers ("which town page do people actually read?"). Options, in the order they fit his stated priorities:

1. Cloudflare Web Analytics — recommended if any. Completely free. A single lightweight script; no cookies, no localStorage, no fingerprinting, no cross-site profiles — Cloudflare states this as the product's design, and it works on any website via the manual script setup (the site does not need to move to Cloudflare hosting).
   Bonus: it reports real-visitor Core Web Vitals, feeding item 7.
   - Catches: metrics are basics only (pages, referrers, countries, vitals) — no per-visitor journeys; history is limited (about six months, with older data sampled); and it is still a third-party script on his pages, from a large US infrastructure company.
   - Source: https://www.cloudflare.com/web-analytics/
2. GoatCounter — the minimal, open-source option. Hosted version is free for reasonable non-commercial use (donation-funded; the operator's own words: personal sites and small-to-medium use are fine). No cookies, no personal data, a script so small it has no measurable speed cost, and the code is open for anyone to inspect — a good match for Charles's inspect-it-himself instinct. Catches: deliberately basic reports, no real-time view, and a small donation-funded service carries more continuity risk than a big vendor.
   Source: https://www.goatcounter.com/
3. Google Analytics 4 — free and powerful, and the honest trade. It integrates with Search Console and answers almost any question, but it sets cookies, feeds Google's advertising-era data ecosystem, adds the heaviest script of the three, and moves the site toward needing a cookie-consent notice for some visitors. For an owner whose first rule is security and safety, this is the option to choose knowingly, not by default.
- Not free, despite the reputation: Plausible is a paid product (trial only), and self-hosted tools (Umami, Matomo) need a server — there is no free server in this stack, so they are not zero-cost options here.

15. Register form backend — upgrading from plain email

Current design (already specced): submissions go to shoplocalhanceville@gmail.com, nothing auto-publishes, Charles approves everything. If the form is a plain "email me" link, the weaknesses are real: it opens the visitor's mail app (many phones have none configured), offers no spam filtering, no record of lost submissions. Free backends that keep the same approval rule:

- Web3Forms (best free capacity): free tier allows 250 submissions per month across unlimited forms — far beyond what a county register form will see. Submissions are emailed to Charles; nothing is published. Setup is one access key tied to his email.
  - Catches: the access key sits in the public page code by design (it is an identifier, not a password, but spam protection leans on its honeypot), and it is a smaller, newer company than the alternatives.
  - Source: https://pengen.diewe.workers.dev/allenarduino/netlify-forms-is-getting-expensive-here-are-the-best-
- Formspree (most established): free plan is 50 submissions per month with basic spam filtering and a dashboard where Charles can read submissions even if an email goes astray; no file uploads on free (logo uploads would need another route, e.g. "email your logo after").
  - Catch: 50/month is a hard cap — fine for this site today, but a successful Register push could hit it; overage means refused submissions, not a bill.
  - Sources: https://dev.to/alen_builds/form-backend-pricing-in-2026-what-actually-costs-you-money-456l ; https://formbricks.com/vs-formspree
- Google Forms (best data control): fully free, unlimited responses, and every submission lands in Charles's own Google account (the same one already holding his Gmail and Calendar) as a tidy spreadsheet — no third-party company holds the data at all. It can be embedded in the Register page or linked from it.
  - Catch: it looks like a Google form, not like his website — the one option that trades a little polish for total data control.
- Data-safety rules whichever backend is chosen (already Charles's policy; restated for the bot): collect only what the listing needs; never passwords, payment details, or ID numbers; submissions visible only to Charles; spam honeypot on; and the approval-before-publishing rule does not change. Note the honest difference: with Formspree or Web3Forms, a company's servers hold submissions until Charles deletes them — he should clear the dashboard/store periodically, the same hygiene as an inbox.

16. Accessibility checking (free tools, professional standard)

The site already carries strong accessibility basics (111 ARIA attributes found in the audit). Free verification tools for each redesign pass:

- Lighthouse (built into Chrome and PageSpeed Insights) — free accessibility score plus the exact failing elements, on every page type.
- WAVE (WebAIM's free browser extension) — visual, in-page error and contrast reporting a non-specialist can read.

- axe DevTools (free tier of the extension) — the most precise of the three for automated checks.
- Automated tools catch roughly a third of real issues; the remaining professional basics are habits, not tools: every image keeps its alt text, every control works by keyboard alone, focus is always visible, and text contrast meets WCAG AA in both the light and dark themes the site already offers. All free, forever.

Bottom line for Charles

Do first (biggest return, all free, mostly one-time): Search Console + Bing import and sitemap submission (items 1–2); structured data and full sharing tags on every page (items 3, 5, 6); the WebP image pass (item 10).
Then the standing protections: service-worker caching rules (item 8), weekly in-repo link checking (item 12), and an uptime monitor (item 11).
Decide deliberately, not by default: analytics (item 14 — Cloudflare if any) and the form backend (item 15 — Web3Forms for capacity, Google Forms for total data control). Skip without regret: FAQ schema for search riches (retired by Google), the carousel beta (not offered in the US), and any tool whose "free" tier needs a server or a credit card.

SPEC 06_competitive_teardown.md

06 - Competitive Teardown: What the Best Do That Shop Local Hanceville Can Copy for Free

Researched October 19, 2026. Method: fetched the live Shop Local Hanceville site and its page map, the prior feature audit (~/workspace/your_files/Website_Feature_Audit.md), and the live home and listing pages of the Cullman Chamber of Commerce (WordPress site plus its GrowthZone directory), Visit Cullman (Cullman County Tourism Bureau), the City of Cullman (CivicPlus), Cullman County, the City of Hanceville, Alabama Tourism (alabama.travel), the North Alabama tourism association, BringFido's Cullman County pages, and AllTrails' Cullman pages. Google/Yelp listing anatomy is assessed from the places data those platforms publish, which search results reproduce in detail (hours tables, Open Now state, ratings, attributes, review excerpts).

The standard applied throughout: every element named here must be copyable at zero cost on a static GitHub Pages site, using data Charles already owns (about 1,074 directory listings, 1,332 tested links, 725 real logos, 206 website entities with embed targets) or data a single sweep-style pass can collect.

PART 1 - THE BASELINE: SHOP LOCAL HANCEVILLE ITSELF
Source: https://shoplocalhanceville.github.io/ and the October 19, 2026 feature audit.

Already professional, and better than several competitors:
- Fast, hand-written, accessible code (92 KB of page/script/style before data, 111 ARIA attributes, dark/light theme that respects the phone setting). None of the government sites below beat it on speed or accessibility basics.
- A live Hanceville Game Center with scores that refresh every minute. NO competitor in this teardown, not the city, not the county, not the Chamber, offers hyperlocal live scores. This is a genuine differentiator and it is already built.
- The next City Council meeting is on the home page with the work session time and where the date was confirmed. The official City of Hanceville site does not surface this as well.
- An inline email signup with a plain-English privacy promise ("We never sell it or share it") instead of a pop-up.
- An honest independence disclaimer in the footer: "Hanceville Entertainment & Shopping is an independent community page. It is not the official Chamber of Commerce and is not run by the City of Hanceville." That sentence is a trust asset. Keep it forever.
- A "Want your business featured? It's free" panel on the businesses page with three numbered steps and Message/Email buttons. Several competitors bury this or charge for it.
- Emergency information (911 / 988, tap to call) appears on the home page. Fits Charles's safety-first brand exactly.

Known gaps the audit already proved (the teardown below keeps pointing back to these): only 11 of 340 records carry the logo the code already knows how to show; no hours field, so no Open Now; no photos or video on listings; events are static text; no map view; no favorites; not installable; inner pages have thin sharing tags; no custom 404.

PART 2 - SITE BY SITE
==========

---
1. VISIT CULLMAN (Cullman County Tourism Bureau) https://visitcullman.com/

The closest thing to a direct competitor for visitors' attention, and the most polished local site in the set. What makes it feel professional:
- A full-width real photo hero (downtown Cullman) under a short emotional promise: "More than you expected. The small town with big experiences." Two lines, no clutter, one button (Plan Your Trip).
- "CHOOSE YOUR EXPERIENCE": six photo-card tiles (Weekend Adventures, Fantastic Festivals, Downtown Discoveries, Faith and Inspiration, Smith Lake Escapes, Farm & Flavor), each with a real local photo, two warm sentences, and one verb-led link ("Explore Downtown", "Plan Your Lake Day"). Visitors pick a mood, not a database category.
- A planning trio: Things to Do / Where to Stay / What to Eat, each a photo card. The whole visitor job in three doors.

- A "WHAT'S HAPPENING IN CULLMAN" events block on the home page, not buried on an events page.
- A social strip branded as a hashtag (#VisitCullman) with Facebook, Instagram, TikTok, and YouTube icons.
- Footer furniture: organization name, hours (9 to 5 daily), tap-to-call phone, email. It reads like a real staffed place.

Copy for free: the hero-plus-promise shape, the experience tiles, the home-page events block, the footer furniture. The photography is professionally shot (WebP, art-directed); Charles cannot match the budget, and should not try with stock. His version: fewer photos, but his own real Hanceville photos and businesses' own Facebook covers, which the collection already holds for many listings.

Avoid: the Cullman-city gloss. It sells a destination; it does not help a resident find a plumber at 7 a.m. Shop Local's job is both, and utility must stay first.

2. CULLMAN AREA CHAMBER OF COMMERCE + GROWTHZONE DIRECTORY https://www.cullmanchamber.org/
https://business.cullmanchamber.org/list/member/alabama-archives-inc-4365

What makes it feel professional:

- One hero promise ("We are in the business of creating opportunities that lead to your growth") with ONE primary button: BECOME A MEMBER. A single call to action, repeated.
- A "Partner Level Investors" logo wall: a row of member logos as instant trust-by-association.
- Three icon cards (About / Sponsorship / Business Resources), each with a small illustration, three sentences, one link.
- A relocation product: a packet for newcomers (community magazine, maps, visitor guide, revenue office information) with a simple request path. Newcomers are treated as an audience with a job to do, not just readers.
- Recognition machinery: a Small Business of the Month program with a public nomination form and published qualification rules. It manufactures a monthly good-news story and gives every business a reason to share the Chamber's site.

The directory itself is the surprise: a sampled member page (Alabama Archives, Inc.) is text-only. Name, map-linked address, two phone numbers, a short About Us, and named reps with "Send an Email" links. No photo, no logo in the standard layout, no hours on the page. It is competent and completely plain. A paid membership directory is being beaten on visuals the day Shop Local fills its logo fields.

- The events engine doubles as community marketing: SHOPOPOLY (run each May for Small Business Week) is a Monopoly-style board of local shops. Players pick up a board at participating stores, collect a stamp or sticker at each, or staple receipts from three different board businesses, and turn the board in for prize drawings, with a grand-prize "Community Chest" completion track. Full mechanics are published on the event page. It turns the directory into a game people physically carry around town.

Avoid: members-only coverage. A Hanceville business that does not pay the Chamber is invisible in that directory; Shop Local lists everyone free, which is its structural advantage. Do not ever copy the pay-to-be-listed bias. Also avoid the WordPress home page's competing promo graphics (several rotating appeals at once) and the directory living on a separate subdomain, which breaks the feeling of one place.

3. CITY OF CULLMAN (CivicPlus) https://cullmanal.gov/

What makes it feel professional:
- Notify Me: residents subscribe to the exact alert categories they care about, and a MyAccount feature personalizes the site. The free-standing lesson is not the software; it is the promise "tell us what you care about and we will come to you."
- A dated, disciplined News Flash stream: proclamations, meeting outcomes, program changes, each with a headline and a date. Boring in the best way: it looks maintained.
- Safety content as a genre: the city publishes scam-warning items ("Scammers can make emails and phone calls appear legitimate..."). A government that warns you reads as a government that protects you. This is Charles's brand too.

Avoid: the home page is a wall of 20+ near-identical "Read on..." news items with no hierarchy, no photos in the stream, and no sense of what matters most. Professional, yes; welcoming, no. Shop Local already beats it with a Top Story treatment; keep the curation, skip the firehose.

4. CULLMAN COUNTY
https://www.co.cullman.al.us/

What makes it feel professional:
- A task-first tile grid under the literal heading "What would you like to do?": Buy a Car Tag, Pay Property Taxes, Court Dates and Fines, Senior Citizen Information, CARTS Information, Take a Driving Test, Find My Commissioner by Map, Citizen Requests. Residents arrive with a task, and the home page is organized by tasks, not by departments. This is the single most copyable layout idea in the whole teardown for Shop Local's city-services content.
- An alerts habit: the Everbridge county alerts system is promoted on the home page with a signup path, and there is a dedicated storm-shelters entry with its own icon.
- A Quick Links rail of the places residents actually go (courts, revenue commissioner, sheriff, hospital, Chamber).

Avoid, honestly: the execution is dated, the same announcements block appears twice on the home page, and there are typos in live links ("Veiw this flyer"). The lesson cuts both ways: the task-grid idea is excellent, and duplicated or stale blocks quietly destroy the trust the idea builds. Shop Local's six-hour check exists precisely to never ship the county's mistakes.

5. CITY OF HANCEVILLE (official) https://www.cityofhanceville.net/

The official site is thin: a menu system (Quick Information and How Do I, Staff Directory, Documents), a water bill payment link to its payment portal, and a footer with address and phone. Takeaway: Shop Local is ALREADY the richer Hanceville front door for community information (news, scores, events, businesses, council detail). The professional move is not to duplicate the city's transactions but to link them cleanly: pay a water bill, pull a document, find a staff member, each one tap from Shop Local's city page to the official destination, labeled as official. Being the best signpost is a legitimate, trusted role.

6. ALABAMA TOURISM https://alabama.travel/

What makes it feel professional:

- Two doors instead of twenty links: "Plan Your Trip" (curate your own) and "UnPlan Your Trip" (let us surprise you). Personality in the information architecture itself.
- Themed TRAILS as a content brand: curated routes (the Year of Alabama Trails campaign, barbecue and cultural trails) that package the same listings into stories people share.
- "What's Happening Now": a live events module high on the home page, date-driven, always current-looking.
- A public accessibility commitment ("A Welcome That Reaches Everyone") written as a welcome, not a compliance footnote.
- A footer link most sites forget: "Submit Your Location or Event," aimed at partners. The directory asks to be fed.

Avoid: the trip planner's account/save machinery (Shop Local's favorites live on the visitor's own device, no sign-in, per Charles's privacy stance), the heavy statewide gloss, and generic photography of places that are not the place. A Shop Local photo rule already exists: real and local, or none.

7. NORTH ALABAMA TOURISM (Alabama Mountain Lakes)
https://www.northalabama.org/blog/post/north-alabama-fall-color-trail/

8. BRINGFIDO (category-page pattern leader)
https://www.bringfido.com/attraction/city/cullman_al_us/

What makes it feel professional:

- Category pages that open with a COUNT and a promise: "There are 7 dog-friendly activities in Cullman. Use the links below to get an overview of each one, see pictures, print directions, and even read reviews from other dog owners."
- Ruthlessly consistent card blurbs: two or three sentences per place, written in one friendly expert voice, each ending with the practical detail that matters (leash rules, patio, fenced areas). Finders Keepers, Monograms Plus, Goat Island Brewing, Clarkson Covered Bridge, Veterans Memorial Park in Hanceville: every card teaches something specific.
- A "Do you know of a place we've missed?" submission prompt on the category page itself, where the gap is visible.
- Cross-town weaving: the Cullman page's orbit includes Crane Hill and Logan pages, so nearby communities feed each other.
- A named trust device (their Pet Friendly Guarantee box) that states a concrete promise in plain words.

Avoid: the affiliate hotel-booking engine that monetizes every page, and thin auto-generated town pages that repeat the same entries under different town names. Shop Local's town coverage must stay honest: a town page lists what is actually there, which is why Round 2 flagged six towns with zero website records instead of padding them.

9. ALLTRAILS (detail-page pattern leader)
https://www.alltrails.com/us/alabama/cullman

What makes it feel professional:

- Stat chips up top on every detail page: length, elevation gain, route type (the Smith Lake Park to Goat Island paddle route reads "8.4 km, 6 m elevation gain, Circular" before any prose). Scannable facts before story.
- FAQ blocks that answer the questions visitors actually ask, in plain language: "Are dogs allowed?", "When is the trail busiest?", "What are the facilities?", "What is the expected weather this week?" Each answer is short and sourced from the data.
- Tag chips distilled from real visits ("Easy to park", "Not crowded", "Bathrooms available", "Dog-friendly") shown right on list pages.
- The same inventory repackaged as listicles: Best lake trails in Cullman, Best kid-friendly trails, Best walking trails. One dataset, many doors, each door answering a different search.
- A "best time to visit" and crowd-level sense that helps a visitor plan, not just find.

Copy the anatomy for Shop Local's parks and outdoor listings (Heritage Park, Sportsman Lake, Smith Lake Park, Hurricane Creek Park, Clarkson Covered Bridge, Ave Maria Grotto, Duck River): stat chips (distance, dog-friendly, restrooms, picnic), one FAQ line each, and two or three listicles on the fun page. Do not copy the app upsells, the account wall, or review counts Charles cannot stand behind.

10. GOOGLE BUSINESS PROFILES AND YELP (the anatomy users expect)
Evidence: the places data reproduced in search results for Cullman businesses (e.g., 412 Public House: rating 4.8 from 184 reviews, price level "moderate", full hours table, "Open Now: No", attributes "Good for special occasions, Serves brunch", and a "What people are saying" excerpt strip).

Users have been trained by these two to expect, in this order: name, one-line category, rating context, price hint, hours with a live Open Now state, the action row (Call, Directions, Website), an attributes row, and proof in other people's words. Shop Local cannot and should not import ratings or scrape reviews (the scraped-review sites, Restaurantji-style, look spammy, go stale, and sit badly with Charles's accuracy rules). What it CAN copy for free is the structure around the proof: the hours table, the Open Now computation, the action row, the attributes ("Outdoor seating", "Dog friendly", "Takes cards", "Wheelchair accessible"), and a one-line "Known for" summary written from the business's own description. Structure is free; borrowed stars are not honest.
Avoid from Yelp specifically: sponsored results mixed into rankings, aggressive app-install prompts, and review-bait notifications. The moment a directory looks bought, a small-town audience stops trusting it, and trust is Shop Local's whole product.

PART 3 - THE RANKED STEAL LIST: 15 THINGS, IN ORDER

==========

Rank weighs impact on how professional and user-friendly the site feels against effort, for THIS site, with THIS data. "Data" says honestly what Charles already has. "Status" flags what is already ordered in the Grok/Copilot instruction files (Section 11 and the Copilot features list) versus what is new.

   Steal from: every leader above; no professional listing anywhere leads with bare text.
   Where on Shop Local: every card on businesses.html, eats.html, shops.html, nonprofits.html, directory.html, and the city/department/council pages.
   Data: HAS IT. 725 logos with normalized display copies are built and indexed; the site's code already renders a logo whenever the field is filled (11 of 340 today). Photos are partial: labeled Google business photos and Facebook covers exist for a share of listings; the rest fill in through the Register flow over time. Status: already ordered; still the single highest-value change on the site.

2. HOURS ON EVERY LISTING, WITH A LIVE "OPEN NOW" BADGE.
   Steal from: the Google/Yelp anatomy (hours table plus Open Now state is the first thing visitors look for after the phone number).
   Where: listing cards and detail blocks everywhere; eats.html first, then businesses.html.
   Data: NEEDS ONE COLLECTION PASS, same method as the logo sweep (businesses' own sites, Facebook pages, Google listings). The Master File has hours only in scattered notes today. Status: already ordered; the pass is the work.

3. A BIG-BUTTON ACTION ROW ON EVERY CARD: CALL, DIRECTIONS, WEBSITE, FACEBOOK.
   Steal from: Google/Yelp's sticky action row; Shop Local has the links today but as quiet text.
   Where: every listing card and the top of every listing detail, thumb-sized, identical everywhere.
   Data: HAS IT. Phones, addresses, and links are verified in the Master File (1,332 tested links); the site already builds Google Maps directions links. Status: new as a design rule.

4. HOME HERO: ONE REAL HANCEVILLE PHOTO, A PROMISE LINE, AND THE SEARCH BOX FIRST.
   Steal from: Visit Cullman's hero ("More than you expected") and alabama.travel's two-door opening.
   Where: the top of the home page, above city services.
   Data: HAS IT. Search already exists site-wide; the hero photo should be Charles's own Hanceville photography or a credited community photo (see item 9's credit habit).
   Status: already ordered (hero plus weather strip).

5. "CHOOSE YOUR EXPERIENCE" PHOTO TILES INSTEAD OF PLAIN CATEGORY BOXES.
   Steal from: Visit Cullman's six experience tiles and alabama.travel's planning trio.
   Where: home page, where the plain "tap a box" category grid sits today: Eat, Shop, Faith and Churches, Outdoors and Smith Lake, City Services, Help and Resources.
   Data: HAS IT. Categories and destinations exist; each tile needs one real local photo (see item 1's photo supply).
   Status: new as the home page's organizing device.

6. A "WHAT DO YOU NEED TO DO TODAY?" TASK GRID FOR SERVICES.
   Steal from: Cullman County's literal tile grid (Buy a Car Tag, Senior Citizens, CARTS, Court Dates).
   Where: home page services band and city.html: Pay a Water Bill (official portal, labeled), Find a Storm Shelter, Senior Center and CARTS, Pay a Ticket, Get a Business License, Find My Council Meeting.
   Data: HAS IT. City and county services, shelters, and links are in the directory and on the site today. Status: new.

7. A SITE-WIDE ALERT BANNER SLOT, USED SPARINGLY.
   Steal from: CivicPlus announcement modules, the county's Everbridge promotion, and the City of Cullman's scam-warning habit.
   Where: a slim banner under the header on every page, empty (invisible) unless something is active: severe weather, road closure, boil-water notice, scam warning. It links to Cullman County EMA and the Everbridge signup.
   Data: HAS the destinations (EMA and shelter links are in the Master File); the content is an editorial habit fed by the city/county/EMA Facebook pages Charles already follows.
   Status: new; the weather strip is already ordered, this is its urgent sibling.

8. EVENTS AS REAL CALENDAR OBJECTS: ADD TO CALENDAR, A NEXT-EVENT COUNTDOWN, AND A HOME "WHAT'S HAPPENING" STRIP.
   Steal from: alabama.travel's "What's Happening Now" and Visit Cullman's home events block.
   Where: events.html (buttons and town filter) and a three-event strip on the home page under the hero.
   Data: HAS IT. 68 events with dates, venues, and towns are already in the site's data. Status: already ordered; the home strip placement is the new emphasis.

9. CURATED TRAILS AND TRIPS: PACKAGE THE DIRECTORY INTO STORIES.
   Steal from: alabama.travel's Trails brand and North Alabama's Fall Color Trail, including photographer credits.
   Where: a Trails and Trips section on fun.html: a Hanceville Heritage Trail (Ave Maria Grotto, Shrine of the Most Blessed Sacrament, Clarkson Covered Bridge, Veterans Memorial Park), a Smith Lake Day, a Downtown Cullman Stroll, and a Dog-Friendly Cullman County list (BringFido pattern).
   Data: HAS IT. Every stop is already a listing; this is editorial grouping only, drafted from the directory and approved by Charles. Status: new.

10. CONSISTENT EDITORIAL BLURBS AND "GOOD TO KNOW" CHIPS ON CARDS.
    Steal from: BringFido's two-sentence expert blurbs and AllTrails' tag chips.
    Where: every listing card: one or two written sentences ("Family-run since..., known for...") plus chips where verified (Dog friendly, Outdoor seating, Drive-thru, Wheelchair accessible, Cash only).
    Data: PARTIAL. Descriptions exist for most listings in the Master File and can seed the blurbs; chips need a light verification pass (BringFido's public pages already document the dog-friendly set). Status: new.

11. A "NEW TO HANCEVILLE?" NEWCOMER PAGE.
    Steal from: the Chamber's relocation packet, minus the packet.
    Where: a new page linked from home and city.html: set up water and power, car tag and license (county links), schools (city and county), Wallace State, CARTS and the Senior Center, trash days, register to vote, and the five most-loved local stops.

Data: HAS IT. Every element is already a listing or a resource entry (53 help resources are on the site today).
Status: new; printing-friendly like the resources pages.

12. BUSINESS OF THE MONTH, WITH PUBLIC NOMINATIONS.
Steal from: the Chamber's Small Business of the Month program and nomination form.
Where: a spotlight panel on the home page (photo, logo, short story, the business's embedded Facebook feed) and a nomination path through the existing contact/Register flow. Charles picks; the pick is announced on his Pages.
Data: HAS logos and photos for most candidates; NEEDS Charles's monthly pick (an editorial ritual, not a data problem). Status: spotlight already ordered; the public nomination mechanic is new.

13. A SHOP LOCAL PASSPORT CAMPAIGN.
Steal from: the Chamber's SHOPOPOLY, adapted down to Hanceville scale and run on Charles's own channels.
Where: a seasonal campaign page plus a home banner during the run (Small Business Week in May, or the Christmas season): a printable or phone-shown passport of participating Hanceville shops; a stamp or code word at each; three stamps enter a prize drawing Charles runs on Hanceville Entertainment & Shopping.
Data: HAS the listings; NEEDS participating shops to opt in, which Charles recruits through the Register flow and his Pages, the thing he is best positioned to do.
Status: new.

14. ONE MAP PAGE: EVERY LISTING A PIN.
Steal from: the Google Maps habit every visitor already has, and the county's clickable district map.
Where: a new map page in the main navigation, pins opening the listing card (name, phone, directions), filterable by category and town. Free build: OpenStreetMap with Leaflet, no API key, no cost.
Data: HAS addresses for most listings; NEEDS a one-time geocoding pass for coordinates (free at this scale), and unaddressed listings simply stay off the map, honestly.
Status: already ordered; the free-stack choice is the new specificity.

15. TRUST FURNITURE ON EVERY LISTING: "LAST CHECKED" AND THE FREE-FOREVER LINE.
Steal from: BringFido's named guarantee box, CivicPlus's dated-everything discipline, and the Chamber's published program rules.
Where: a small line on listings ("Links last checked Oct 19, 2026"), the footer promise ("Every listing is free. No business pays to appear or to rank."), and the existing independence disclaimer kept verbatim.

    Data: HAS IT. The sweeps already date every verification;
    this is surfacing it. Status: new, and it converts Charles's backstage six-hour checking into a visible reason to trust the site.

PART 4 - WHAT NOT TO COPY (THE AVOID LIST)
- Pay-to-be-listed or members-only completeness (Chamber directory). The day a Hanceville business must pay to appear, the site's reason to exist is gone.
- Imported star ratings and scraped reviews (Restaurantji-style aggregators; Yelp's sponsored mixing). Unverifiable, goes stale, and contradicts the accuracy rules the whole directory was built under.
- The CivicPlus news firehose: dozens of identical "Read on..."
  items as the home page. Curate a top story and a few; a wall of sameness reads as neglect, not diligence.
- Duplicated content blocks and stale announcements (the county home page runs the same announcements twice). This is what the six-hour check is for; never let it ship.
- Account walls and sign-in planners (alabama.travel's trip planner pattern). Favorites live on the device; no visitor accounts, ever, per Charles's privacy rules.
- Pop-ups and overlay modals (newsletter modals, app-install prompts, exit-intent offers). The site's inline email signup with a plain privacy promise is already the better pattern.
- Affiliate booking engines and ad density (BringFido's hotel push, Yelp's ads). No ads, no sponsored ranking; trust is the product.
- Generic or wrong-place photography. A beautiful photo of somewhere else is a lie on a local site. Real Hanceville and Cullman County photos only, credited when contributed.
- Heavy pages: autoplaying hero video, uncompressed image dumps, framework bloat. The site's 92 KB hand-written build is a competitive advantage; the government and chamber sites are all heavier. Never trade it away.
- App-store thinking: AllTrails and Yelp constantly push their apps. Shop Local's installable web app (already ordered) gives the home-screen icon without the nagging.

Reviews System — Feasibility and Design Brief (Item 07)

For: Charles Adams, Shop Local Hanceville (https://shoplocalhanceville.github.io/) Prepared: October 19, 2026, as part of the Professional Upgrade research series Question answered: Can the site (1) show each listing's Google reviews on the page,
(2) let visitors submit a 1-to-5 star review on the site "like Google,"
(3) pull in reviews from Yelp, Facebook, and other platforms, and
(4) show an overall grade and a percentage for each listing — all free and lawful?

Everything below was checked against the platforms' own terms, pricing pages, and documentation on the date above. Where a popular belief is wrong, this brief says so plainly and shows the source.

Recommendation in one sentence: Build Shop Local's own moderated review system (it is free, lawful, permanent, and entirely under Charles's control), present Google and the other platforms as clearly labeled links and — only where it fits the free caps — live Google components, and never copy, scrape, or blend outside ratings.

2. Google reviews: what the rules actually are

2.1 The Places API (New) — the official data route

- What it returns. A Place Details request can return a place's overall rating, its total rating count, and at most 5 reviews (sorted by relevance by default), each with the reviewer's name, photo, star rating, text, and relative date. There is no way to get a business's full review history from Google.
- What it costs. Reviews live in Google's most expensive data tier. On Google's own pricing list (checked Oct 19, 2026): "Place Details Enterprise + Atmosphere" is free for the first 1,000 requests per month, then $25 per 1,000. The rating number by itself is also an Enterprise-tier field ($20 per 1,000 after the same 1,000 free). A Google Cloud billing account with a payment method on file is required even to use the free amounts — no billing account, no working key. "Free" here means "no charge if usage stays under the cap," not "no card."
- The storage rule that decides everything. Google's Places policies say, in so many words: "You must not pre-fetch, cache, or store Places API content beyond the allowed exceptions." The only exceptions are the place ID (storable forever) and latitude/longitude (30 days maximum). Review text, reviewer names, ratings, and review counts have no storage exception. A static site whose whole design is "keep a data file and read from it" therefore cannot lawfully keep Google reviews in its data files — not for a day, not "just the text," not as a weekly refresh. Every display of a Google review must be fetched live at the moment it is shown.
- The display rules, if fetched live. Google requires: the Google logo shown with the data when it is not on a Google Map; each review credited to its author (avatar, name, and profile link — avatar alone is the bare minimum when space is tight); a working link from each review back to that review on Google Maps; and a visible notice explaining how the reviews are ordered and filtered. Review content must be visually separated from non-Google content, and Google attribution may never be hidden or altered.
- The static-site problem. A GitHub Pages site has no server, so a live call means the visitor's browser calls Google directly with the project's API key visible in the page. Two consequences: (a) the key must be locked down to this website's address only (referrer restriction) so it cannot be lifted and run up a bill; and (b) the math does not work at directory scale — 1,000 free Enterprise calls a month is roughly 33 calls a day for a directory of 1,074 listings. If every listing view fetched its reviews live, the free cap would be gone in the first days of the month, after which the card on file is charged $25 per 1,000 calls. Loading reviews "only when a visitor taps to see them" reduces the burn but cannot fix the storage ban, the attribution workload, or the card-on-file requirement.

Google's newer Places UI Kit offers ready-made Place Details components that render a place's rating and reviews directly on a web page, with Google's attribution built in and handled by Google. Facts that matter here:

- It runs in the browser on a static page using a referrer-restricted API key — the one Google-built route that fits GitHub Pages without a server.
- It is billed per component load at its own rates: the official pricing list shows Places UI Kit SKUs with free monthly caps of 10,000 (Query) and 5,000 (Pro) loads, then $1–$5 per 1,000. It still requires the same Google Cloud project, billing account, and API key as everything else Google Maps.

- Google labels the UI Kit Experimental (pre-GA) — "limited support and potential for incompatibility." It is a real product but not a finished one; it can change.
- The component shows Google's presentation of the place (rating, a selection of reviews) as a block. It does not hand the site the review data to restyle, reorder, or merge into its own grade.

Verdict on UI Kit: lawful and the only practical way to put actual Google review content on a listing page for free-tier money — but only if it is loaded on demand (for example, inside a listing's expanded detail view, when a visitor opens it), never pre-loaded for every card on a page, and only after Charles accepts a Google billing account with a card on file and a capped, alarmed budget of zero dollars (quota set at the free cap so it stops rather than bills). Even then, treat it as an enhancement, not the foundation: if the free caps or the experiment end, the site must still stand on its own reviews and its links.

2.3 Google Business Profile API — not a route at all

The Business Profile API does expose full review lists and replies — only for locations the signed-in account owns or manages, behind an API-access approval. Charles does not own or manage the 1,074 listed businesses, so this API can never lawfully feed the directory. It exists so a business can manage its own reviews. Rule it out entirely.

2.4 The free Google embed and link-outs — the always-lawful fallback

- The Maps Embed place view (the standard Google Maps iframe embed) is free with no usage cap (the pricing list literally shows "Unlimited" for the Embed SKU). It shows Google's own place card; reviews themselves are read on Google after a click. It does not place review text on the page.
- Links are always lawful. A "Read reviews on Google" / "Write a Google review" button that opens the business's Google listing costs nothing, breaks no terms, and is what the site's directory data already supports (each listing already carries verified website/social links; a Google listing link is one more verified link per listing, collected in a data pass — the link is a fact, the reviews stay on Google).
- A warning about the "simple" snapshot idea. Hand-copying each business's Google star average into the directory ("4.7 on Google, 212 reviews") across 1,074 listings is systematic harvesting of Google Maps content outside the channels Google permits — Google's terms prohibit copying and saving Maps content (business data and user reviews expressly included) — and it rots immediately, because ratings change daily and the site's six-hour check cannot re-verify numbers it has no lawful feed for. A single factual line on a single listing, written by a human with the check date shown, is the outer edge of defensible; as a directory-wide system, do not do it. Use the link, or the live component, instead.

3. Yelp: the free door is closed, and the terms bar the blend

- No free API exists anymore. Yelp retired the free Fusion API and moved API access into paid "Yelp Places API" licensing. Yelp's own plan page (checked Oct 19, 2026): a 30-day trial with 5,000 calls, then Base $229/month (no review excerpts at all), Enhanced $299/month (up to 3 review excerpts per business), Premium $643/month (up to 7 excerpts). There is no free tier to build on. Charles's rule is "without paying anything," so Yelp review content is out on price alone.
- The terms would block the design even with a paid plan. Yelp's API Terms of Use (§5) forbid, among other things: caching Yelp content longer than 24 hours (§5a); displaying Yelp user review ratings "alongside or in conjunction with other user-generated content" — Yelp's own example is using its ratings for the benefit of a competitor (§5c); any commercial use without Yelp's written consent (§5d); removing the links inside Yelp content (§5e); and letting users rate, rank, or review Yelp content on your site (§5j). A directory page showing Yelp stars beside Shop Local's own reviews and its own star form is precisely the combination Yelp prohibits.
- Scraping Yelp is expressly prohibited by the same terms and by Yelp's site terms; widget services that quietly scrape Yelp inherit that violation. Do not use them.
- Lawful fallback (recommended): a "See reviews on Yelp" link on listings that have a Yelp page — collected as an ordinary verified link during a data pass, exactly like the Facebook and website links the directory already keeps. No Yelp stars, no Yelp text, no blended grade.

4. Facebook: ratings belong to each Page's admins

- How Facebook ratings work now. Pages show an overall rating built from past star ratings and Recommendations ("recommends / doesn't recommend") rather than a simple public star feed.
- The access rule. Reading a Page's ratings/recommendations through Meta's Graph API requires a Page access token — a token issued to an admin of that Page. Meta's API changes removed the ability to display reviews from a Page you are not an admin of; every legitimate Facebook-reviews widget works by having the Page's own admin connect their Page. Charles admins his own Pages (Hanceville Entertainment & Shopping, Cullman County Meme Factory) — for those two, a token-based display is technically possible. For the other ~1,072 listings, there is no lawful way to pull their Facebook ratings or recommendation text onto this site: not through the API, not through an embed, and not by scraping (Meta's terms prohibit automated collection, and the project's standing rule already bans scraping-style workarounds).
- What the Page Plugin does and does not do. The official Facebook Page Plugin — already specified in Charles's instruction files for every listing — embeds a Page's posts, photos, and videos, playable on the site. It has never included the Page's reviews or rating. That plan stands unchanged.
- Lawful fallback (recommended): on each listing, beside the Facebook embed, a plainly labeled "See reviews on Facebook" link to that Page. For Charles's own two Pages only, he may later choose to connect an admin-token reviews display — flagged here as optional, his Pages only, and never in the blended grade.

5. The recommended system: Shop Local's own reviews

This is the piece Charles fully controls: lawful at any scale, free, permanent (the data belongs to the site, not to a platform's API), and — done right — the only reviews on the page eligible for Google's star treatment in search results (§8). It reuses the exact pattern Charles already approved for business registrations: a form, an approval queue, nothing publishes itself.

5.1 How a review travels (descriptive architecture)

1. The form. Each listing's page carries a "Review [Business Name]" section with a simple form provided by a free form backend of the kind the site already uses for submissions (form-to-inbox services with a free tier, e.g. Web3Forms/Formspree-class tools, or a Google Form — final pick is Charles's; all keep the site itself static and serverless). The form knows which listing it belongs to because the listing's own page address is included with the submission automatically — the visitor never types or picks the business from a list.
2. The queue. Submissions land in one moderation inbox/queue in submission order, each marked Pending. Nothing about a submission touches the public site. The queue shows Charles: listing name, stars, review text, reviewer name, town (optional), date/time, and the automatic spam-screen result.
3. The decision. Charles (or a moderator he names) applies the written moderation policy in §6 — approve, or reject with a reason chosen from the policy list. Decisions are star-neutral by rule.
4. Publication. Approved reviews are added to the site's review data the same way all site data changes: through Charles's normal update flow with his bot, inside the existing six-hour quality check rhythm — the check verifies that published reviews match approved queue entries one-for-one. The public site stays a static site reading its own data file; rejected reviews are never in that file.
5. What is stored. Only what the display needs: listing, stars, review text, reviewer display name, month/year, and the insider-disclosure flag if the reviewer declares one. Reviewer email addresses and technical details stay in the private queue only — never published, never in the site's data file.

5.2 The review form — fields and star pattern for older users

Fields, in order, each labeled in plain words above the field:

1. Your star rating (required): five large stars as a proper radio-button group — each star at least 44–48 pixels, tappable and keyboard-selectable, each with a word beside the row: 1 Poor · 2 Fair · 3 Good · 4 Very good · 5 Excellent. The chosen value is repeated back in words ("You chose: 4 — Very good") so nobody has to guess what a half-lit star row means. No hover-only tricks; what you tap is what you get.
2. Your review (required): a generous text box with a one-line prompt: "Tell neighbors what your visit was like." Minimum a short sentence (about 20 characters) so a bare star with no words is the exception, not the rule — Google likewise recommends accepting ratings accompanied by a comment and the author's name.
3. Your name (required): shown publicly as first name and last initial by default ("Sandra M."), which keeps reviews accountable without publishing anyone's full name by surprise. The form says exactly how the name will appear, before submission.

4. Your town (optional): one short field; shown as "— Sandra M., Hanceville."
5. Connection checkbox (required choice): "I own, work at, or am family of someone at this business" — Yes / No. A Yes does not ban the review; it attaches a visible "Connected to this business" label when published (the FTC requires insider connections to be disclosed, §9), and Charles may hold such reviews to the same genuineness standard as all others.
6. Email address (required, never published): used only so Charles can verify a first-time reviewer or ask about a problem submission. The form states that plainly next to the field.
7. Hidden machinery the visitor never sees: a honeypot field (bots fill it, humans never do — any submission with it filled is discarded silently), a minimum-fill-time check (a form completed in under a few seconds is held for extra scrutiny), and the listing identifier.

The form ends with two plain sentences: "Reviews are read by a real person before they appear. Honest reviews — good or bad — are welcome here." Then one submit button. No account, no password, no social login — accounts would cut participation among exactly the older neighbors this site serves, and the moderation queue is the real protection.

5.3 Anti-fake measures that stay friction-light

Charles has campaigned against fake-profile mass-reporting; this system is built so a pile of fake accounts cannot move a grade:

- Moderation before publication is the wall. A fake review that is never published does no harm. Nothing reaches the site unreviewed — the same rule as registrations and the pets board.
- First-time reviewers are held, kindly. A review from an email address the queue has never seen is published only after Charles's normal approval (which every review gets anyway); the extra step available for a first-timer is a one-line confirmation email ("Tap to confirm this review is really yours"). Repeat reviewers in good standing still wait for approval — there is no auto-publish tier — but Charles can process known names faster.
- One review per person per listing. The queue flags a second submission for the same listing from the same email or the same name so Charles sees "already reviewed this listing" before deciding. (Honest limit: a static site with no accounts cannot make this bulletproof against a determined person with many email addresses — which is exactly why human moderation, not software, is the enforcement.)
- Burst alarms. If one listing suddenly receives an unusual cluster of reviews in a short window — the mass-reporting pattern in reverse — the queue groups them and Charles reviews the cluster as a set before any of them publishes. A cluster is a reason to look, never a reason to auto-reject honest reviews inside it.
- Rate limits at the form backend. The free form tools include basic spam filtering and submission throttling; a per-listing soft cap (for example, flag — not block — beyond a handful of reviews for one listing in a day) is applied in the queue.
- No incentives, ever, and no gating. Nobody is offered anything for a review; every customer of a business is equally welcome to review, happy or unhappy (inviting only the happy ones — "review gating" — is prohibited by the FTC rule's suppression principles and by Google's own business policies).

- Businesses get a reply path, not a delete path. An owner who believes a review is fake can write to Charles through the Register/Update page; Charles re-checks the queue record (email, timing, cluster) and decides. An owner can also have a short owner response published under the review, labeled as the owner's — a response, never an edit of the review itself.

6. Moderation workflow (the standing policy Grok and Charles follow)

1. Every submission enters as Pending. Nothing auto-publishes, ever.
2. Charles reviews the queue on his normal working rhythm (suggested: with the same pass as registrations). For each review he chooses:
   - Approve — publish as written (spelling may be left as the author wrote it; reviews are never rewritten).
   - Approve with label — insider connection declared or evident: publish with the "Connected to this business" label.
   - Reject — not a real visit: no sign the reviewer was ever a customer, or details that cannot be true of this business.
   - Reject — abuse or off-topic: attacks a person rather than describing an experience, contains threats, slurs, or private information (phone numbers, addresses, children's names).
   - Reject — duplicate or campaign: repeat of the reviewer's earlier review, or part of a coordinated cluster that fails the genuineness check in §5.3.
3. The star-neutrality rule (binding): a review may never be approved or rejected because of its star count or because it is negative. A factual, civil 1-star review publishes on the same terms as a 5-star review. This is what the law requires (§9), what Google's structured-data rules assume (§8), and what makes the grade worth trusting.
4. Rejections are recorded in the queue with their reason — a paper trail if anyone ever claims suppression.
5. The six-hour check confirms: published reviews = approved queue entries, counts and averages recomputed from the published set only, and no review text on the site that is not in the approved set.

7. Display specification — stars, overall grade, percentage

Per listing, wherever its reviews appear (card summary + full listing section):

A. The summary line (on cards and at the top of the listing):
- Five-star graphic, filled in proportion to the average, plus the number in words: "4.6 out of 5".
- Beside it: "(23 reviews)" — approved, published reviews only.
- Minimum-count rule: no average and no percentage is shown until a listing has at least 3 approved reviews. Below that, show the reviews themselves and the line "Only a couple of reviews so far — yours helps neighbors decide."
  An average built on one review is a coin flip dressed as a fact.
- Grade definition (the "overall grade"): the plain arithmetic average of the star values of all approved on-site reviews, shown to one decimal. That is the whole formula — no weighting, no recency tricks, no editor's thumb.

B. The percentage (what it is, and what it is not):
- Definition: the percentage of approved reviewers who rated the business 4 or 5 stars, displayed with its meaning spelled out: "91% of reviewers rated it 4 or 5 stars." Never a bare "91%" — a percentage with no stated denominator is how honest numbers become misleading ones.
- It is computed only from Shop Local's own approved reviews, over the same set as the grade, and appears only when the grade itself appears (≥3 reviews). It is never a blend of Google + Yelp + Facebook + on-site numbers: those platforms count different people, define ratings differently (Facebook's is recommendation-based), and two of the three prohibit the combination outright (§3, §8).

C. The full review list (on the listing's page/section):
- Newest first, stated on the page ("Showing newest first").
- Each review shows: star row, review text exactly as approved, reviewer display name (first name, last initial), town if given, month and year, and the "Connected to this business" label where it applies.
- A "Review this business" button opens the §5 form for that listing.
- An owner response, when Charles has approved one, appears under its review, clearly labeled "Response from the owner."

D. The platform row (separate, labeled, never blended):
- Buttons/links: "Read reviews on Google" · "See reviews on Facebook" · "See reviews on Yelp" (only where that listing actually has such a page).
- If Charles later adopts the Places UI Kit for detail views (§2.2), the Google component sits inside its own clearly bounded box headed "Reviews from Google," visually separated from Shop Local reviews — Google's attribution rules require exactly this separation — and its numbers are never averaged into §A/§B.

E. Site-wide honesty furniture:
- A short "How reviews work here" page, linked from every review section: reviews come from neighbors; a real person reads each one before it appears; good and bad publish on the same terms; businesses are never charged and can never pay to change a grade; outside platforms' reviews live on their own sites, linked, not copied.

---

8. Structured data (schema.org): what is and is not allowed

Google's own Review Snippet documentation, quoted and applied:

- Allowed — and genuinely available to this site: Google lists local business review markup as eligible "only for sites that capture reviews about other local businesses." Shop Local Hanceville is exactly that: a directory whose on-site reviews are about other businesses. So the `LocalBusiness` entry for a listing may carry `aggregateRating` and `review` markup built from Shop Local's own approved reviews, provided the same reviews and the same aggregate are visible on the page, the ratings come directly from users, and the markup counts match the displayed counts. (Google never guarantees stars will show; eligibility is not a promise.)
- Not allowed:

  - Marking up Google's, Yelp's, or Facebook's ratings or review text: "Don't aggregate reviews or ratings from other websites." Platform aggregates stay out of the site's markup entirely — including inside a blended "overall grade."
  - Any markup for reviews or ratings not visible on the page.
  - Fake or undisclosed incentivized reviews in the page or the markup.
  - Editor-created ratings: "Don't rely on human editors to create, curate, or compile ratings information for local businesses." This is why §6's star-neutrality rule matters beyond fairness: Charles's moderation may screen for genuineness and abuse, but the moment moderation becomes curating which honest ratings count, the aggregate stops being user-sourced. Approve the genuine, reject the fake/abusive, never touch the honest middle.
  - Anything about Shop Local itself or Charles's own businesses/Pages: where the entity reviewed controls the reviews about itself, the pages are ineligible for the star feature — Google names even an embedded third-party widget (its examples: a Google Business reviews or Facebook reviews widget) as self-serving in that case. Shop Local does not mark up reviews of itself, full stop.

9. FTC basics, in plain words (Consumer Review Rule, 16 CFR Part 465)

Federal law since October 21, 2024, enforced with civil penalties (over $53,000 per violation at recent adjustment). The parts that govern this site:

- No fake reviews. Never create, buy, sell, or knowingly publish reviews from people who don't exist or never used the business — including AI-written ones. (§465.2)
- No buying sentiment. No compensation or incentive conditioned on a review being positive (or negative about a competitor). (§465.4) — Simply asking customers for honest reviews is fine; paying for praise is not.
- Insiders must say so. Reviews by owners, managers, employees, or their close family must clearly disclose the connection — hence the §5 checkbox and label. (§465.5)
- No posing as independent. A site must not claim to offer independent reviews of a category that includes its own offerings while secretly controlling the outcome. Shop Local's reviews are of other businesses and its "How reviews work here" page (§7E) keeps the relationship transparent. (§465.6)
- No suppression. No threats, groundless legal claims, or false accusations to stop a negative review — and never claim "these are all our reviews" while quietly withholding the low ones. §6's star-neutrality rule and rejection log are the compliance mechanism. (§465.7)
- No fake social proof. No buying followers, likes, or views to look bigger. (§465.8)

A host that merely publishes genuine user reviews is not the rule's target; the duties above are the ones Charles controls, and the design in §5–§7 was shaped to meet them by default.

10. What NOT to do (each of these was considered and rejected)

- Scrape Google, Yelp, or Facebook review pages — prohibited by all three platforms' terms; fragile; the exact conduct Charles campaigns against when it is aimed at him.
- Use third-party "review widget" services that aggregate platforms for free — the free ones typically scrape or require the business's own admin connection per platform; they cannot lawfully conjure Yelp/Facebook reviews for 1,074 third-party businesses, their data handling is outside Charles's control, and several would put platform ratings beside his own reviews in ways Yelp's terms forbid.
- Hand-harvest star averages at directory scale (§2.4) — terms risk plus instant staleness.
- Blend sources into one grade — misleading to readers, prohibited by Yelp's terms and Google's markup rules, and undefined as mathematics (different scales, populations, and definitions).
- Offer anything for a review, ask only happy customers, or let a business remove a review by asking — FTC and Google-policy violations, and the fastest way to make the grade worthless.
- Require accounts to review — kills participation by the site's core older audience; moderation, not login walls, is the protection.

11. Decision list for Charles

1. Adopt the on-site review system (§5–§7) as the reviews foundation. — Recommended: YES.
2. Google on listing pages: (a) links only — zero cost, zero risk, works today; or (b) links now + Places UI Kit on detail views later, accepting a Google billing account with a card on file, quotas hard-capped at the free amounts, pre-GA software. — Recommended: (a) now; revisit (b) only if visitors ask for more.
3. Yelp and Facebook: links only; no stars, no text, no blend. — Recommended: YES (it is also the only lawful free option).
4. Grade + percentage: computed from on-site approved reviews only, shown from 3 reviews up, percentage labeled "rated 4 or 5 stars." — Recommended: YES.
5. Publish the "How reviews work here" page with the first review sections. — Recommended: YES.

08 — Immersive Interaction Design
Shop Local Hanceville — https://shoplocalhanceville.github.io/Research prepared October 19, 2026, for the bot that builds and maintains the site. Area covered: swiping, zooming, tab bar functions, link functions, and immersion techniques — what can be added to make the site feel rich and app-like ("fully immersive… super professional, clean, with no lagging," in Charles's words) using only free, native, vanilla web capabilities. No code in this file — every item is a buildable specification in descriptive terms, with the implementing APIs and patterns named.

How this file relates to the others (read first)
This file does not override anything. Three standing decisions govern every item below, and where an immersive idea conflicts with them, the standing decision wins:

- Part 02 (UX & Accessibility), M5: no gestures beyond the tap are ever required. Every swipe or pinch in this file is a bonus layered on top of visible buttons that do the same job. If a visitor never swipes or pinches anything, they lose nothing.
- Part 01 (Design System), §13 motion budget: no carousels or auto-advancing anything, no parallax, no scroll-jacking, no looping animation, no autoplay sound; transitions are 150–300 ms; the phone's reduced-motion setting removes them. Immersion here means responsive and substantial, never busy.
- Part 01, §12A icon system: Lucide icons (24 px grid, 2 px stroke), every icon paired with a visible word. New controls below use the §12A mapping (chevrons for gallery arrows, share, map-pin, calendar, heart, x for close) — no new icon style is introduced.

Also carried in: Part 02's M4 (nothing tappable under 44 px, primary buttons 48 px), M18 (nothing moves or refreshes on its own), M19 (Back always restores the same list, scroll position, search, and filters), and M24 (keyboard operable, focus never hidden behind a fixed bar).

A note on where listings live today: listings render from data files onto section pages (directory, businesses, eats, and so on); there are no per-listing pages yet. Several items below speak of a listing's "detail view" — read that as the listing's own expanded view/section (the pattern Part 01 §7 already builds toward), reachable by the deep link in §4.4 of this file. Where a technique truly needs per-listing pages, the item says so and is phased accordingly.

What: Where a listing has more than one real photo (Part 01 §12C rules: real photos of the real place only), the photos form a side-by-side strip the visitor can swipe through, one photo at a time.
Where: The listing's detail view, and the home page Spotlight card when the spotlighted business has several photos. Never on ordinary list cards — the list stays fast to scan (Part 01 §7A).
How (descriptive):

- Build it as a horizontal scroll container (CSS Scroll Snap: `scroll-snap-type: x mandatory` on the strip, `scroll-snap-align: center` on each photo) — the browser's own scrolling does the swiping, so there is no gesture-recognition script to get wrong and nothing to download. Scroll Snap is supported by effectively every phone browser in use today (96%+ globally).
- Each photo takes about 85% of the strip's width so the next photo peeks in from the edge — the peek is what tells a first-time visitor "there is more, this way." Photos are the §12C treatment: 4:3, WebP sized to the box, width/height set so nothing shifts.
- Controls, always visible, always present even though swiping works: a previous and a next arrow button (Lucide chevrons, 48 px targets, at the strip's edges) and, under the strip, BOTH a row of dots AND a words counter — "Photo 2 of 4." Dots alone are too small and too abstract for this audience; the counter is the primary indicator and the dots are decoration that matches it. Arrows disable (visibly, and announced) at the ends — no wrap-around loop, because a loop makes "how many are there?" unanswerable.

- The arrows and counter are wired with a few lines of vanilla script (scroll the strip by one photo; an IntersectionObserver watches which photo is centered and updates the counter/dots). The newer pure-CSS scroll-button/scroll-marker features (Chrome only, not yet universal) may enhance this later; they are not the base.
- The strip lives inset from the screen edges (the page's normal side padding), and horizontal overscroll is contained (`overscroll-behavior` on the strip), so a sideways flick inside the gallery never triggers the phone's swipe-to-go-back gesture and never drags the whole page sideways.
- Vertical page scrolling is never captured: the strip scrolls only sideways, the page only up and down, and a diagonal thumb movement resolves the way the browser natively resolves it. No `touch-action: none` anywhere — that property is how sites break their own scrolling.
- Keyboard and switch users: the strip is a labeled region ("Photos of [business name]"); when it has keyboard focus, the arrow keys move between photos; every photo is reachable and its alt text (Part 01 §12C) is its description.
- Photos load lazily (native `loading="lazy"`); only the first photo loads eagerly. Nothing auto-advances, ever (Part 02 M18, Part 01 §13) — a gallery that moves by itself is a carousel, and carousels are forbidden on this site.

Performance cost: Effectively zero script (snap is CSS; the counter wiring is roughly a kilobyte). The real cost is photo bytes, already governed by §12C sizing and lazy loading — off-screen photos cost nothing until approached.
Older-user risk + mitigation: The known risks are (a) not realizing the strip swipes — mitigated by the peek, the arrows, and the counter, so swiping is never the only way; (b) a sideways flick accidentally flinging several photos — mandatory snap lands on one photo at a time, and the counter re-orients the visitor; (c) motion sickness — snap scrolling is the visitor's own finger movement, not site animation, and smooth-scroll behavior is disabled under reduced-motion per Part 01 §13.

1.2 Horizontal card rails for Spotlight, New in Town, and events (P1)
What: On phones, the home page's Spotlight business, New in Town listings, and the "What's Happening" events strip may present as a sideways rail of full cards instead of a tall stack, so the home page stays short. On wider screens the same content is the grid Part 01 §7B already specifies — same cards, same order.
Where: Home page only, and only for these three curated, short sets (a handful of cards each). The directory itself is NEVER a rail: the full list is a vertical list, always (scanning 1,074 listings sideways would be a punishment, not a feature).
How: Same construction as §1.1 (Scroll Snap, one card per snap, next card peeking ~15%), with three differences: cards snap to the start edge rather than center; the rail's last item is a "See all" card (a full-size tappable tile with the words, e.g., "See all events") so the rail itself teaches where the complete list lives; and on screens 640 px and up, arrows appear beside the rail's heading. Snap proximity (not mandatory) is acceptable here so a gentle scroll can rest between cards on wide rails — but on phone-width rails use mandatory, one card per stop, for the same orientation reason as §1.1. Performance cost: CSS only, plus the §1.1 counter wiring is not needed (rails show no counter; the heading and the "See all" card carry orientation). Card images follow existing lazy rules. Older-user risk + mitigation: Risk: a rail can hide content from someone who doesn't think to swipe — the home page's most important sets must not depend on the rail. Mitigation: a rail never holds more than the first screen's worth of meaning — the heading, the first card, and the "See all" path are visible without any swiping, and every rail item also lives on its own full page (Events page, directory) reachable from the tab bar. If testing with residents (Part 02 N5) shows rails confuse, they revert to stacks with no other change — the cards are identical.

1.3 Swipe patterns considered and REJECTED

- Swipe the card itself to reveal Call/Save actions (the email-app pattern): hidden gestures with no visible clue; violates Part 02 M5 in spirit and would hide the site's most important button (Call) behind a trick. Rejected.
- Swipe sideways to move to the next business in a detail view: an accidental flick would throw away the listing the visitor came for and land them on a stranger's page; recovery depends on Back discipline the visitor shouldn't need. Next/previous-business buttons, labeled with the names, are the professional pattern if ever wanted. Rejected as a gesture.
- Custom pull-to-refresh on lists or scores: fights the browser's own pull-to-refresh, double-triggers, and teaches a gesture that works nowhere else. The browser's built-in behavior stays. Rejected.
- Edge-swipe navigation (swipe from screen edge to go back): collides with the phone's own back gesture and with §1.1 rails. Rejected.

2. ZOOMING

2.1 Tap-to-zoom photo lightbox (P1 — the one true "immersive" piece)
What: Tapping any listing photo (in the gallery, on a grid card, or in the Spotlight) opens that photo large, full-screen, on a calm dark background, with the business name and a plain caption under it. Tapping the hero photo does the same (with its photo credit).
Where: Everywhere a real photo appears. One shared lightbox for the whole site — not one per page.
How (descriptive):

- Build on the native `<dialog>` element opened with `showModal()`: the browser supplies the top layer, focus containment, Escape-key closing, and background inertness for free — no library, no hand-rolled focus trap to get wrong.
- Chrome of the lightbox, all labeled in words, all ≥48 px targets:

  a Close button (Lucide `x`, top corner, with the word "Close" for screen readers and as visible text on wider screens), the business name and caption in 17 px text, and — when the listing has several photos — the same previous/next arrows, dots, and "Photo 2 of 4" counter as the gallery, driving the same snap strip rendered large.
- Zooming inside the lightbox: the photo area allows the phone's own pinch-zoom (the zoomable region is a scrollable container with touch behavior left native — `touch-action: pan-x pan-y pinch-zoom` on the photo surface only, never `none`), so two fingers spread the photo exactly the way the Photos app taught them. As the guaranteed non-gesture path, three buttons sit under the photo: Bigger, Smaller, and Fit (reset) — each steps the photo's scale (e.g., fit → 150% → 200%) by resizing the photo inside its scrollable area, so buttons and pinch always agree about where the photo is. Double-tap to toggle fit/zoomed may exist as a third bonus, never the only way.
- The full-resolution photo loads only when the lightbox opens (the card showed the §12C display size); while it loads, the display-size version is already on screen, sharpening in place — no spinner moment.
- Closing returns focus to the exact photo that was tapped (the browser restores it if the dialog is built correctly; verify in the acceptance test), and the page behind has not scrolled.

Performance cost: The dialog is native; the wiring is a small shared script (~2 KB). Photo bytes are on-demand only. This is the cheapest immersion on the site per unit of felt quality.

Older-user risk + mitigation: Risks: (a) feeling "trapped" in a full-screen view — mitigated by the big labeled Close, the phone's Back button also closing the dialog (native dialog behavior on Android; wire the same on iOS), and the caption always naming whose photo this is; (b) pinch not discovered or not physically possible — the Bigger/Smaller/Fit buttons are the primary path, pinch is the bonus (Part 02 M5 ordering, applied honestly); (c) zooming and then losing the photo off-screen — Fit always restores, and opening always starts at Fit.

2.2 Logo inspection zoom (P2 — nearly free, genuinely kind)

What: In a listing's detail view, tapping the logo opens the same lightbox showing the logo large on white.

Why it exists: Logos are identity documents for this audience — a resident checking "is this the right Smith's?" by reading the small print in a logo is a real behavior, and the site already holds normalized logo files big enough to show (the 1600 px normalized masters exist in the collection; serve a web-sized ~800 px version).

How: Reuse §2.1 wholesale; the lightbox caption is the organization's name, and zoom buttons work identically. No pinch needed on a logo (buttons suffice), but nothing prevents it.

Performance cost: Zero new machinery; one more image served on demand.

Older-user risk + mitigation: None beyond §2.1's; the risk it removes (misidentifying a business) outweighs it.

2.3 Map zoom behavior (P1 rules for the already-planned map page)

The map page itself is ordered elsewhere (one map, every addressed listing a pin, free OpenStreetMap/Leaflet per the competitive research). Zooming is where maps hurt older users, so these rules are part of that build:

- The map never captures the page's scroll. On touch screens, one finger drags the PAGE, not the map, until the visitor taps a labeled "Move the map" button that arms map dragging (and a matching "Done" state). On desktop, mouse-wheel zoom requires holding Ctrl (the standard cooperative pattern) — a plain wheel scroll always scrolls the page. (In Leaflet terms: dragging and scroll-wheel zoom start disabled; the button toggles them.)
- Buttons do the zooming, always: + and − buttons, 48 px, stacked at the map's corner (Lucide `plus`/`minus`), plus a "Show everything" reset button that re-frames all pins. Pinch-zoom on the map works when the map is armed, as a bonus.
- The list is the equal citizen (Part 02 M5, N2): beside the map, the same places as the standard listing cards, and tapping a pin shows name, Call, and Directions — never information that exists only inside the map.

Performance cost: None beyond the map's own (already accepted) cost; these are configuration choices, not additions.
Older-user risk + mitigation: The classic failure — a visitor scrolling the page gets "stuck" inside a zooming map and cannot leave — is the single most common map complaint from older users. The arm/disarm pattern plus page-scroll priority eliminates it by construction.

2.4 Text zoom: never fight the visitor's own zoom (standing rule, restated as a build check)

- No page may disable or cap user scaling (no `user-scalable=no`, no `maximum-scale=1` in the viewport settings) — WCAG 1.4.4 and simple respect; some browsers ignore those settings anyway, so a design that needs them is already broken.
- Browser pinch-zoom of ordinary pages must keep working everywhere except inside the §2.1 lightbox's photo surface and the armed map, where pinch is given to the photo/map instead — and in both places a non-pinch path exists (buttons).
- The site's own text-size control (Part 02 S1: "A / A+ / A++", remembered like the theme) remains the discoverable path; pinch is the visitor's private tool and the site simply never blocks it.

3. TAB BAR — FUNCTIONS, NOT JUST BUTTONS

The bar's anatomy is already specified (Part 01 §6B): phones only, four items — Home · Categories · Search · Events — 24 px Lucide icon above a 13 px label, 64 px tall plus the phone's safe-area inset, filled-pill active state with weight and color (never color alone), hidden at 900 px and up, content padded so it never covers anything (WCAG 2.4.11). This section adds the functions Charles asked about and settles the open debates.

3.1 What each tab actually does (P1)

- Home: goes home; tapping it while already home scrolls to the top (the pattern phone users already know from apps).

- Categories: opens the Categories page (the §12A category tiles).
- Search: does not open a page — it takes the visitor to the directory search field and focuses it, keyboard ready (Part 01 §6B already orders this; it is the single most app-like behavior on the site and costs nothing).
- Events: opens the Events page.

Every tab is a real link underneath (works with script off, works for keyboard and screen readers as ordinary navigation, in a labeled `<nav>`), enhanced — never replaced — by the behaviors above.

3.2 Badges: two, and only two, kinds (P2)

- Events count badge: a small pill on the Events tab showing how many events fall in the next 7 days ("3"), computed on the visitor's phone from the events data the site already loads.
  Rules: it shows a count, never a bare red dot (a dot says "something!" without saying what — anxiety without information); the number is part of the tab's screen-reader name ("Events, 3 coming up this week"); it never exceeds one digit plus a "+" ("9+"); when the count is zero, no badge — an empty badge is noise.
- "New" dot on Categories: when the directory data has gained listings since this visitor's last visit (the phone remembers the date locally — the same on-device-only pattern as favorites), Categories carries a small purple dot and its screen-reader name gains "new listings added." It clears the moment they open Categories. This quietly advertises that the site is alive and maintained — the trust Charles's twice-daily update cycle (owned by the update-cadence work, not this file) actually delivers.
- Nothing else gets a badge. No badge on Home or Search, no promotional badges, no badge that exists to nag. A bar where everything shouts is a bar nobody reads.

Performance cost: Both badges compute from data already on the phone (events file; a stored date). Zero requests, zero libraries.
Older-user risk + mitigation: Badge blindness/confusion is the risk; mitigated by counts-in-words for assistive tech, by the two-badge limit, and by badges never being required to understand the tab (the label always says the whole job).

3.3 Fixed versus hide-on-scroll: FIXED, and here is the reasoning (decision)

The fashionable pattern hides bars while scrolling down and reveals them on scroll up (this site's top header already does exactly that, Part 01 §6A — correctly, because the header is secondary chrome). For the bottom bar the recommendation is the opposite: the bottom bar never hides, never shrinks, never moves.

- It is this audience's primary navigation (Part 02 M6: same place, same words, every page). A control that disappears teaches "things on this site vanish" — the precise fear M19 designs against.
- A bar that reappears mid-scroll lands under a descending thumb and causes the mis-tap it was trying to save space from.
- The space it costs is already paid for honestly: content carries bottom padding (§6B), so nothing is ever hidden behind it — unlike hide-on-scroll bars, which exist to reclaim space this design never spends.

The middle option (shrink to icons-only on scroll) is rejected explicitly: it breaks the icon-plus-word rule (§12A) exactly when the visitor is mid-task.

3.4 The desktop equivalent, and the consistency contract (P1)
At 900 px and up the bottom bar is hidden and the sticky header (Part 01 §6A) carries navigation. For the two to read as one site:
- Same four doors, same order, same words, same icons. The header's inline links present Home, Categories, Search, Events first, in that order, with the same Lucide glyphs beside the words; the header's further links (News, Resources, About) come after, as §6A already groups them. A visitor who learned the phone bar can read the desktop header without relearning.
- Same active treatment: the current section gets the same filled-pill + bold treatment in the header as in the tab bar.
- Same Search behavior: the header Search button focuses the directory search field, exactly like the tab.
- Badges mirror: the Events count badge appears on the header's Events link too (same computation, same wording).
- The header keeps its hide-on-scroll (desktop users have the persistent tab-equivalent at page top on load, a mouse, and a keyboard; and the footer contact block, Part 02 M8, is the desktop's constant anchor).

3.5 Two honest footnotes
- The installed-app icon badge (the number on the phone's home-screen icon, via the Web App Badging API, `setAppBadge`) is a different thing from §3.2: it works only for the installed web app (Part 01 §7.4 feature), only in some browsers, and would show the events count. Verdict: harmless, free, and optional — Phase 3 garnish; never let it substitute for the in-page badges, which work for everyone.
- A fifth tab for "Saved" (My Saved Places) is the only candidate that would ever justify five items. Part 01 §6B says four, no more — this file does not overturn that. Saved Places stays reachable from the header heart and the Categories page.
  If Charles later asks for it, five equal tabs is the maximum the pattern allows; flag it as his decision, not a default.

4. LINK FUNCTIONS — THE SITE'S REAL SUPERPOWER

A directory exists so that tapping a name does something. These are the link behaviors that make the site feel professional; most already exist in embryo (the audit counted 17 tap-to-call and 17 tap-to-email links) — this section completes and systematizes them.

4.1 Call, text, and email intents (P1)
- Call: every printed phone number is its own `tel:` link (Part 02 M15), and the Call button carries the number in words.
  In the link itself the number is written in full international form (+1 and the ten digits) so every phone dials it correctly, while the visible text stays the friendly local format. Free, native, zero cost — already the site's pattern; extend it to every number everywhere, including hours lines, event details, and officials' listings.

- Text a business: where a listing's number is published, a tertiary "Text" action may sit in the detail view (not on the card — the card's three-button discipline, Part 01 §7A, stands) using an `sms:` link. Honest limitation, stated for the build: pre-filled message text in `sms:` links is honored by most Android phones and recent iPhones but not all — so the button's job is "open a text to this number," and any pre-fill ("Hello, I found you on Shop Local Hanceville…") is a bonus where it works, never load-bearing. The site cannot know which numbers are mobiles; the action is labeled "Text" only where a business itself publishes the number for contact — landlines that can't receive texts are the business's own published choice, and the visitor's messaging app handles the failure gracefully.
- Email: `mailto:` links with a pre-filled subject naming the context — emailing a business: subject "Question from Shop Local Hanceville"; emailing the site (footer/Register): subject lines per Part 03's microcopy. Pre-filling the subject is the whole trick: it makes the visitor's message arrive already labeled, and it costs nothing.

Performance cost: Zero. These are link formats, not features.
Older-user risk + mitigation: The risk is surprise — a tap that opens an unexpected app. Mitigation is the standing label rule (Part 02 M15): every such link's words say exactly what will happen ("Call," "Text," "Email"), and nothing auto-fires; the visitor always presses send/dial themselves inside their own app.

4.2 Directions deep links (P1)
- The Directions button uses Google's documented universal Maps URL (the `maps/dir/?api=1&destination=` form): on a phone it opens the maps app the visitor actually has; on a computer, the Google Maps site. This is what the site already links to; the spec is to make it uniform — every Directions control on every card, detail view, map pin, and officials' listing uses the same construction, with the destination being the listing's street address (falling back to its published place name plus town where no street address exists).
- In the detail view only, a quiet second text link — "Open in Apple Maps" (the documented `maps.apple.com/?daddr=` form) — serves iPhone households that prefer it. Two choices, offered once, in the place where choices belong (the detail view), never a pop-up asking which app on every tap. (Part 02 N2's verdict stands: no custom directions widget; familiar tools win.)

Performance cost: Zero (outbound links).
Older-user risk + mitigation: Leaving the site for a maps app can strand a visitor; mitigated by Part 02 M19 (Back restores the exact card they left) and by the address also being printed as plain text on the card, tappable itself (M15).

4.3 Share and copy-link (P1 — completes Part 02 N1)

- Every detail view — and, via a small tertiary action, every card — carries a Share button (Lucide `share` + the word "Share," per §12A). Tapping it opens the phone's own share sheet through the Web Share API (`navigator.share`) with three fields set: the listing's name as the title, a plain sentence as the text ("[Name] — [category] in [town]. Phone [number]. Found on Shop Local Hanceville:"), and the listing's deep link (§4.4) as the URL. The visitor picks Messages, Facebook, email — apps they already know.
- Where the share sheet does not exist (some desktop browsers, Firefox), the button instead copies the link (Clipboard API) and the button's label briefly becomes "Link copied" with a check icon, then returns — the confirmation pattern Part 02 M19 already uses for favorites. If copying also fails, the fallback is a small panel showing the link as selectable text. Three rungs, each honest, none requiring an account or a service.
- Share targets for events work identically, with the event's name, date, and the Events page deep link.

Performance cost: Native APIs; a few lines of wiring. No third-party share widgets — the colorful button strips sold by share services are trackers with a loading cost, and are rejected by name.

Older-user risk + mitigation: The native sheet is the pattern this audience already uses to send photos to family — familiarity is the mitigation. The button never shares automatically; it only opens the sheet, and canceling costs one tap outside it.

4.4 Deep links to a specific listing, and honest link previews (P1; per-listing pages P3-optional)

- Every listing gets a stable address: a permanent ID in the listing's data (a short slug of its name, assigned once, never changed even if the business renames — the ID is an address, not a label). The directory and category pages honor it as a fragment: `directory.html#cut-n-up-barber-and-style`.
- What happens when one is opened: the page loads, finds the card, scrolls it to the top of the reading area (below the header, respecting the §6A scroll padding), and outlines it briefly with the gold border treatment — a two-second, static (non-animated under reduced motion) highlight that fades. If the ID is unknown (a business closed), the page opens at the top of the right category with the M11-style line: "That listing has moved or closed — here is everything in [category]." A shared link can therefore never land on a dead end.
- Deep links are what §4.3 shares, what §4.5's QR codes encode, and what search engines and the six-hour checker can point at. Search results on the site itself also gain a "Copy link to this listing" as part of the Share fallback panel.
- Link previews, honestly: when a deep link is pasted into Facebook or Messages, the preview shows the page's sharing image and title (the directory's or town page's), not that one business's logo — a static site cannot mint a unique preview per fragment. The page-level previews must therefore be complete and correct on every page (full Open Graph set: title, description, absolute image URL at 1200×630, page URL — already ordered in the standing instructions; this file adds the acceptance check:

  paste each main page's link into a message draft and read the preview as a visitor would). The complete fix — a lightweight generated page per listing, built by the bot from the same data, each with its own preview and room for the §1.1 gallery — is real and free, but it is a Phase 3 build of ~1,074 small pages; it is listed here so Charles can choose it knowingly, not as a default.
Performance cost: Fragment handling is a small script; the highlight is CSS. Zero per-listing cost until/unless Phase 3.
Older-user risk + mitigation: A link from a grandchild that opens mid-page can disorient ("where am I?") — the highlight plus the card's own name at the reading top answers it, and the tab bar and header are exactly where they always are.

4.5 QR codes — for paper, where they belong (P2)
- Where QR codes earn their place: printed things. (a) The printable town sheets (Part 03) each carry one QR code to that town's page and one to the Register page. (b) The bot generates, on Charles's request, a printable counter card for any business:
  "Find us on Shop Local Hanceville" with the QR of that listing's deep link — a business tapes it by the register; a customer's phone camera does the rest. (c) Event flyers the site produces carry the event's deep link as a QR.
- Where they do not belong: on the website's own screens. A visitor already holding the phone cannot scan their own screen;
  an on-screen QR is decoration pretending to be function.
  Rejected on-screen.
- How: QR images are generated ONCE, at build time, by the bot, from the deep-link URLs, and stored as small static image files (SVG or PNG, a few KB each) beside the print materials. No runtime generator library, no external QR web service (those phone home and can inject advertising into the redirect — a security smell Charles would reject on sight). The encoded text is the site's own URL, printed in words under the code as well, so the sheet still works for anyone whose camera won't scan.
Performance cost: Zero at runtime; negligible static files.
Older-user risk + mitigation: Scanning is a learned skill; mitigated by the printed URL in words under every code, and by QR always being the second path on paper, never the only one (the town sheet's phone numbers are already printed in full, Part 02 S6).

4.6 Calendar links (P1 — mechanics for the already-ordered Add to Calendar)
Each event offers Add to Calendar with two honest routes, both generated by the bot from the event's data at build time:
- A downloadable calendar file (the standard `.ics` format) — opens the visitor's own calendar app (Apple, Google, Outlook all read it) with the event pre-filled. This is the primary button; it works offline, on every platform, with no account.
- A secondary text link, "Add to Google Calendar," using Google's documented template-link form, for the many households that live in Google Calendar on a computer.
Both carry the event's name, date, start/end times (Central, stated in the event's own words on the page too), location, and the event's deep link in the notes field — so the calendar entry itself points back to the site.

Performance cost: The `.ics` files are tiny static files generated per event (68 events today); the Google link is a URL.
Older-user risk + mitigation: A downloaded file can confuse ("what did I just download?") — mitigated by the button's label naming the outcome and the phone's own calendar opening immediately, which is the behavior calendar apps train. The event page also always prints the date and time as plain words (Part 02 M24: real text, never only inside a button).

4.7 Link behavior rules (standing, stated once)
- Same tab for everything. No link opens a new tab/window — including business websites and Facebook. New tabs pile up invisibly for this audience and strand them; with M19's Back restoration guaranteed, the same tab is the safe default. (The one exception class: a link tapped while a form is half-filled must never navigate away at all — forms warn instead, per Part 02 M22's keep-everything-typed rule.)
- Intent links are validated, not fetched. The site's link checking (the six-hour check and the bot's scans) treats `tel:`/`sms:`/`mailto:`/maps links by format — right shape, right number of digits, matches the listing's published data — and never tries to "open" them. A changed phone number is caught by the data comparison, which is where it can actually be caught.
- No link shorteners, no redirect services, ever — every link on the site shows its true destination domain (the security posture Charles already enforces against lookalike domains applies to the site's own links first).

5. IMMERSION WITHOUT CHEAPNESS — VERDICTS

Each candidate technique, judged for a hometown directory whose audience skews older: Professional (build it), Phase later (sound but sequenced), or Gimmicky (rejected, with the reason on the record).

What: Moving between pages cross-fades softly instead of the hard cut; where a card's photo leads to the same photo large (the lightbox, or a future listing page), the photo itself can glide between the two — the "shared element" effect native apps are loved for.
How: This site is a set of static pages, so the relevant form is cross-document view transitions: a CSS opt-in (`@view-transition { navigation: auto; }`) plus a shared name on the elements that should morph. Support today: Chrome/Edge and Safari (18.2+) yes; Firefox not yet — and in Firefox the navigation is simply the normal instant cut, which is the correct fallback: this is a progressive enhancement that can never break a page.
Dose it strictly within Part 01 §13: root cross-fade at 200 ms, one shared element per navigation at most (the listing photo), nothing sliding in from edges, nothing rotating. Reduced motion turns it off entirely — the wrapper checks the visitor's setting and skips the transition, per §13's rule that the calm version is the base design.

Performance cost: No library, no weight — a CSS rule and a name attribute. The browser composites snapshots it already has.
Older-user risk + mitigation: Motion between pages can read as "the page jumped." Mitigated by the cross-fade-only dose, the 200 ms ceiling, and the reduced-motion off-switch. If resident testing (Part 02 N5) dislikes it, removing one CSS rule restores hard cuts everywhere — reversibility is part of the verdict.

5.2 Instant navigation — prefetch and speculation: PROFESSIONAL (P1)
What: The "no lagging" Charles asked for, delivered honestly: pages the visitor is likely to open next are fetched (or fully prepared) before the tap, so navigation feels instant.
How: The Speculation Rules API — a small block of rules in each page naming what to prepare: prefetch (download the page and its assets, cheap) for all same-site links at conservative eagerness, and prerender (fully build the page in the background, the expensive-but-instant option) reserved for the four tab-bar destinations from the home page and the directory from category pages — the journeys this audience actually takes. Chrome/Edge support this today; Safari and Firefox fall back to ordinary navigation plus standard prefetch hints where offered — again, enhancement only. Two courtesies are part of the spec: if the visitor's phone sends the Save-Data signal or the connection reports itself slow/metered, speculation stands down entirely (bandwidth is the visitor's money); and prerendering never applies to pages with forms half the town might submit (Register) — prefetch only there, so no stale form state is ever presented.
Performance cost: This is the one item that spends bandwidth to buy speed; the spend is bounded by the rules above (a handful of small, hand-weighted pages — the whole site's code is ~92 KB — and the data files those pages need). State the trade in the build report so Charles sees it chosen, not hidden.
Older-user risk + mitigation: None visible — pages simply arrive faster. The risk is invisible waste on metered connections, handled by the Save-Data stand-down.

5.3 Skeleton screens: PROFESSIONAL, narrowly (P1)
What: While a list or the scores block loads, the page shows the shape of what's coming — gray boxes where cards will be, in the card layout — instead of a blank area or a lone spinner.
Where, and only where: the script-rendered listing areas, the search results area, and the home page Game Center scores — the three places content genuinely arrives after the page. Static content (headers, category tiles, text pages) renders instantly and must never be skeletoned; a skeleton over instant content is theater.
How: Pure CSS placeholders in the exact geometry of Part 01 §7 cards (same heights, same logo box), so when real cards arrive nothing moves (the layout-shift discipline of Part 02 S5). The skeleton is still — no shimmering sweep animation (a moving gradient is precisely the kind of loop §13 forbids, and under reduced motion it would freeze anyway; design it calm from the start). If loading fails, the skeleton is replaced by the Part 02 M17 error state with its Try again button — the skeleton is never the failure state, and a hard timeout (a few seconds) guarantees the swap.

Performance cost: A few CSS rules; negative cost in perceived terms — research on loading indicators (NNGroup's guidance and the LinkedIn studies behind the pattern) consistently finds shaped placeholders make identical waits feel shorter than spinners or blank pages, though the honest size of the effect is "noticeable," not magic — the actual speed work is §5.2 and Part 01 §6.
Older-user risk + mitigation: A gray page can read as "broken" to someone who has never seen the pattern — mitigated by one plain line inside the first skeleton card: "Loading businesses…" in real text (M24: information is text, not images of text), so the state explains itself in words.

5.4 Scroll-triggered reveals: MOSTLY GIMMICKY here — keep only the §13 allowance
The design system already permits exactly one: a gentle fade-and-rise (8 px, 300 ms, once) as cards first appear, for visitors who allow motion (Part 01 §13). This file endorses that ceiling and rejects everything beyond it for this site: repeated reveals on every scroll (content that hides until scrolled to punishes anyone whose scroll lands mid-page, and screen readers meet content that visually "isn't there yet"), parallax backgrounds (vestibular risk, pure decoration, real rendering cost on cheap phones), and scroll-driven progress spectacles. Implementation note for the one allowed reveal: an IntersectionObserver adds the visible class once per card; CSS scroll-driven animations (`animation-timeline: view()`) may replace the observer later in browsers that support them, but the observer version is the base because it works everywhere and honors reduced motion trivially.
Verdict: the allowance is professional; the genre is gimmicky for a directory, whose entire job is to be scanned, not watched.

5.5 The hero: real photo, still — PROFESSIONAL; video and slow-zoom — GIMMICKY Part 01 §5/§12C already settle the hero: a real Hanceville photo (or the clean pine treatment), the star, the promise line, search first. This file adds only verdicts on the usual "immersive" requests: background video of Main Street — rejected (megabytes on rural connections, motion that cannot be paused by the person it bothers, and a small town's dignity is not a car commercial); slow Ken Burns zoom on the hero photo — rejected (a looping animation under §13, and a vestibular irritant); rotating hero photos by animation — rejected (auto-advancing under M18). What IS approved, and feels alive without moving: the hero photo may change with the content cycle — a different real local photo on different days, swapped when the bot updates the site, the way a shop window changes. Stillness on the screen, freshness across visits.

5.6 Weather and alert motion: static words — PROFESSIONAL; tickers — GIMMICKY
The weather strip and any EMA alert banner (already ordered features) follow one motion rule: nothing scrolls, crawls, or blinks. The classic scrolling ticker is rejected by name — it is unreadable at the visitor's own pace (the core WCAG 2.2.2 problem), impossible to tap, and the visual signature of a cheap news site. Alerts appear as a still banner with the alert icon, the words of the warning, and a link to Cullman County EMA; when the underlying numbers refresh (on the site's hourly cycle, owned elsewhere), they update in place in reserved space so nothing jumps (Part 02 M18's quiet-update rule, with the Game Center as the existing model). Severity is icon plus words plus color — never color alone (Part 02 M3).

5.7 Micro-feedback and "haptics": visual confirmations — PROFESSIONAL; vibration — SKIP Native apps feel responsive partly through tiny confirmations. The web equivalents that work here are visual and already half-built: the favorite heart filling with its "Saved to My Saved Places" confirmation (Part 02 M19), the Share button's "Link copied" state (§4.3), buttons' pressed states (Part 01 §8A), and the badge appearing on Events after data loads. Keep them instant (under 150 ms), worded, and still.
Actual vibration (`navigator.vibrate`): skip it. It works only on Android Chrome; every iPhone browser is WebKit and does not support it at all, and Firefox removed it — so on the phones most of this audience carries, the "feedback" would silently not exist, and a confirmation that exists for some neighbors and not others teaches nothing. Spend nothing here; the visual confirmations above are the reliable channel. (If a future Charles-approved reason ever appears, it must be Android-only, tap-triggered, and under 50 ms — but the recommendation on record is: do not build it.)

5.8 The rejected shelf (so the bot never has to re-decide)
3D tilt-on-hover cards (no hover on phones; motion for its own sake) — rejected. Custom cursor effects (desktop-only decoration) — rejected. Sound of any kind, including "subtle" clicks (Part 02 N4) — rejected. Chat bubbles and AI assistants floating over the directory (a stranger's widget between a resident and a phone number; also a third-party service, against the site's same-origin discipline) — rejected. Infinite scroll on the directory (destroys orientation, footer reachability, and the result count that Part 02 M12 promises) — rejected; the directory paginates or lists fully with the A–Z and filters doing the work. Full-screen takeover menus with animated panels beyond the §13 expand allowance — rejected; the Menu is a page (Part 01 §6A), calm and complete.

§4.4 deep links	~1 KB	none	Fragment routing + highlight CSS
§4.5 QR codes	0 runtime	none	Build-time static images, print only
§4.6 calendar files	0 runtime	none	Tiny static `.ics` files
§5.1 view transitions	0	negligible	Native; CSS opt-in only
§5.2 speculation	0 code	bandwidth by design	Bounded by rules; Save-Data stands it down
§5.3 skeletons	~0 (CSS)	none	Replaces existing loading text
§5.4 the one reveal	<1 KB observer	negligible	Once per card; off under reduced motion

The whole program adds roughly 5 KB of script and no libraries, no fonts, no external requests. The site stays what Part 01 measured: a ~92 KB hand-written site that loads like one.

7. BUILD ORDER AND ACCEPTANCE ADDITIONS

P1 (build with the already-ordered features): §1.1 gallery, §1.2 rails, §2.1 lightbox, §2.3 map zoom rules, §3.1 tab functions, §3.4 desktop consistency, §4.1–4.4 intents/maps/share/deep links, §4.6 calendar mechanics, §5.2 speculation, §5.3 skeletons.

P2 (next): §2.2 logo zoom, §3.2 badges, §4.5 QR print assets, §5.1 view transitions (after P1 is proven calm in resident use).

P3 (Charles's explicit choice only): §4.4 per-listing pages, §3.5 app-icon badge, §3.5 fifth tab.

Rejected (do not build): §1.3 all, §5.4 beyond the allowance, §5.5 video/Ken Burns/rotating hero, §5.6 tickers, §5.7 vibration, §5.8 all.

Additions to Part 02's acceptance test (same phones, same method):

11. In a listing gallery, reach the last photo three ways — swipe, arrows, keyboard — and the counter agrees each time; a sideways flick never navigates the browser back or drags the page.
12. Open the lightbox, zoom with the Bigger button to full, return with Fit, close with the Close button and with Back; focus is back on the photo tapped, page unmoved.
13. On the map, scroll the page through the map with one finger without the map zooming; then arm the map and zoom by buttons and by pinch.
14. From a listing, use Share to send its deep link to a second phone; open it there: the right card sits at the reading top, highlighted, with the tab bar where it belongs. Repeat with a link to a closed listing and land on the explained category view, not an error.
15. With reduced motion ON at the phone level: no transitions, no reveals, no smooth scrolling — and every P1 item still fully works by taps and buttons alone.
16. With Save-Data ON (or a throttled connection): no speculation traffic; pages still load in their normal order and the skeleton-to-error swap (M17) fires correctly.

09 - Implementation Patterns and Performance Engineering
Shop Local Hanceville (https://shoplocalhanceville.github.io/)

Prepared October 19, 2026, companion to the Copilot/Grok instruction files. This file is the HOW: descriptive implementation patterns and hard performance numbers a bot can build from. It adds engineering detail under the standing rules, especially Section 4 (Facebook embeds) and Section 6 (Performance: No Lag, Anywhere) of the instruction files. Where this file and the instruction files ever disagree, the instruction files win and the disagreement is reported to Charles.

Reference conditions for every number in this file: a low-end Android phone of the Moto G Power class (or a desktop browser with 4x CPU throttling standing in for one), on a "Slow 4G" connection
(about 1.6 Mbps download, 150 ms round-trip), which is the standard Lighthouse mobile test profile and a fair stand-in for rural Cullman County connections. A page that is fast only on office Wi-Fi is not fast.

1. THE PERFORMANCE BUDGET (HARD NUMBERS)
==
A budget is a ceiling, not a goal to grow into. Any change that would break a number below does not ship until the weight is found somewhere else. All sizes are transfer sizes (compressed, as sent over the wire) and count the site's own files only; Facebook embed content is budgeted separately in Section 2 because the site does not control its size, only when and how much of it loads.

FIRST LOAD, PER PAGE TYPE (own files: HTML + CSS + JS + fonts + images + data the page needs to show its first screen):
- Home page: 650 KB total at most. HTML 40 KB, CSS 35 KB, JavaScript 70 KB, hero image 120 KB, all other first-screen images together 80 KB, first-screen data 100 KB. No more than 30 requests. Live Facebook iframes at load: ZERO.
- Listing index page (a town or category list): 550 KB total. The data file that page reads: 120 KB at most (keep data split per town/category, as the current 14-file split already does; a page fetches only the file it needs). Cards rendered on first paint: at most 24 (see batching, Section 6).
- Listing detail view (one business opened up): 450 KB total, plus the one Facebook embed the visitor asked for.
- Content page (news, events, resources, council): 500 KB total.

SITE-WIDE CAPS:
- Total site JavaScript, every module added together: 150 KB compressed at most. For scale: Facebook's own SDK file alone measures about 158 KB of JavaScript (2025 measurement). This site's ENTIRE script budget is smaller than that one third-party file. That is the discipline that keeps the site fast.
- Total CSS: 40 KB compressed. One stylesheet, shared by all pages.
- Fonts: zero web fonts is best (system font stack). If one brand font is used: one family, at most two weights, WOFF2, self-hosted on this same site, 30 KB total at most (Section 4).
- Logo images: the normalized web-ready set only; 20 KB per logo at most; serve the size closest to what is displayed (cards show logos at 56 CSS pixels, so the 112-pixel-wide file for sharp screens, not the 512-pixel master).
- Photo images (storefronts, hero): Section 4 pipeline. Card photos 60 KB at most at their largest served size; the single home-page hero 120 KB at most.
- DOM size: at most about 1,200 elements on first render of any page (Lighthouse treats more than about 1,500 as excessive); at most about 3,000 even on the longest fully-expanded list, achieved by batching and content-visibility (Section 6).

CORE WEB VITALS TARGETS (Google's "good" lines are the hard ceilings; the site aims inside them):
- Largest Contentful Paint (main content visible): hard ceiling 2.5 seconds; working target 2.0 seconds, on the reference phone and connection, 75th percentile of real visits.
- Interaction to Next Paint (tap to visible response): hard ceiling 200 ms; working target 150 ms for taps on cards, buttons, tabs, and filters.

- Cumulative Layout Shift (page jumping around): hard ceiling 0.1; working target 0.05. On listing pages the target is effectively zero below the first screen: reserved boxes (Section 2 and 4) mean late content lands in space already held for it.
- First Contentful Paint: 1.8 seconds at most on the reference profile.

HOW EACH APPROVED FEATURE FITS OR THREATENS THE BUDGET:
- Facebook embed per listing: the biggest threat on the site (Section 2). Fits ONLY under the facade pattern. Unguarded, it breaks every number above at once: bandwidth contention hurts LCP, dozens of extra documents hurt INP and memory, unreserved boxes hurt CLS.
- Swipe carousels (spotlight, photo strips): fit if built on native scroll-snap (Section 3). A JavaScript carousel library does not fit: the library alone can eat half the JS budget to move pictures sideways, a job the browser does free.
- Photo zoom/lightbox: fits. Transform-based, one small shared module, loaded only on pages with photos.
- Richer tab bar: fits if it is plain HTML/CSS present in the first paint (a sticky bar, badges drawn from data already on the page). Threatens CLS if injected late by script; threatens INP if its tap handlers do heavy work. Build it into the page, not on top of it.
- Hero + live weather strip: fits if the strip's height is reserved, its data loads AFTER the page's own content, and its failure collapses it cleanly (Section 5). The weather fetch is never on the critical path.
- Open Now badges and the event countdown: fit. Computed from data already loaded, refreshed by one shared 60-second timer for the whole page, never one timer per card.
- Favorites (on-device): fit. Local storage reads/writes are tiny; no network at all.
- Map page: fits only behind its facade (above).
- Business Spotlight rotation: fits if slides move by transform, pause the moment a visitor touches or tabs into them, and never auto-advance under reduced-motion settings (Section 3).
- Reviews (if built later): star input and lists are cheap; the risk is unbounded review text per card. Cap reviews shown per card (newest 3, "read more" expands) so DOM and data stay in budget.

2. FACEBOOK EMBED ENGINEERING

WHAT ONE EMBED REALLY COSTS (say it plainly):
- The JavaScript SDK route starts with Facebook's SDK file: about 158 KB of JavaScript, before a single post is shown.
- Each rendered Page Plugin is then a full Facebook document in an iframe: its own scripts, styles, images, and tracking, dozens of requests and typically several hundred KB per instance, sized by Meta and outside this site's control.

- Multiply by a directory page of 46 businesses and an unguarded page asks a cheap phone to run 46 copies of Facebook at once. That is the lag Charles is determined not to have. It is also why Section 4 of the instructions already forbids loading every embed at page open; this section names the exact pattern that obeys that rule.

THE REQUIRED PATTERN: FACADE FIRST, LIVE PLUGIN ON ARRIVAL
(web.dev's facade pattern: a static element that looks like the embed, replaced by the real third-party content only on interaction or arrival; Google's own example weighs a 3 KB facade against a 540 KB player).

1. DEFAULT STATE - THE SNAPSHOT FACADE. Every listing's embed area renders first as the snapshot card Section 4 item 5 of the instructions already describes: the page's picture (from the logo/image collection, not fetched from Facebook), the page name, and one clear button: "See the latest post." The box is exactly the size the live plugin will occupy (below), so swapping changes nothing around it (CLS stays zero). The facade costs the site a few KB it already had. The listing's own facts - name, logo, phone, hours, directions - are never inside the facade; they are the page's own content and are already fully usable.
2. ACTIVATION - TWO TRIGGERS, ONE QUEUE. The live plugin loads when EITHER the visitor taps the facade button, OR the facade scrolls to within about 300 pixels of the visible screen (IntersectionObserver with a root margin, so the plugin is ready just before it is seen, not after). Charles's choice - latest post with videos playable on the site - is preserved: activation is automatic on arrival, no tap required; the tap exists for visitors on very weak connections and for anyone whose browser blocked Facebook (Section 5). Activations join a single queue for the page: at most 2 embeds loading at the same time, and at most 6 live plugin iframes existing on a listing page at once (1 on a detail view; 2 in Charles's own Pages section). When the cap is reached, remaining facades wait; combined with card batching (Section 6, at most 24 cards rendered at first, "Show more" for the rest), a page can never be asked to hold more live Facebook documents than a cheap phone can run.
3. ONE SHARED MECHANISM, NOT ONE PER LISTING. Whatever route is chosen, it is loaded once per page by the shared script, the first time any embed activates - never in the page head, never render-blocking, never duplicated per card.

ROUTE CHOICE - IFRAME VS. SDK (honest trade-offs):

- IFRAME ROUTE (the plugin's own iframe form, facebook.com/plugins/page.php): needs NO Facebook JavaScript on this site at all; each embed is isolated, so one bad embed cannot break its neighbors; the iframe's address is assigned only at activation, which gives exact control (the browser's own loading="lazy" on iframes is a useful second belt, but its trigger distance is the browser's choice, so the observer decides, not the browser). Cost: each live instance is a whole

Facebook document with no sharing between instances - heavier in total when several are live, which is what the caps above are for.
- SDK ROUTE (connect.facebook.net SDK + fb-page elements): one shared ~158 KB script serves every embed on the page, and the plugin supports Meta's own data-lazy="true" attribute, which asks the SDK to hold off until the element nears the screen. Costs: that 158 KB is spent even if the visitor never reaches an embed; if the SDK is blocked (ad blockers and Firefox's tracking protection block connect.facebook.net for a real share of visitors) every embed on the page fails together; and Meta revises the SDK under the site without notice.
- RECOMMENDATION: the iframe route, observer-activated, for listing and detail pages (isolation and zero shared script win at directory scale); the SDK is acceptable ONLY on Charles's own Pages page if its richer layout is wanted there, loaded on first activation like everything else. Either way, the facade, the queue, and the caps are not optional extras - they are the pattern.

SIZING AND RESERVED SPACE (kills layout shift):
- The Page Plugin only renders between 180 and 500 pixels wide; design embed boxes at the card's full width up to 500 px, with the plugin set to adapt to its container.
- Reserve the plugin's full box before activation: a fixed height per layout (set once in the shared stylesheet, e.g. the standard embed height used across the site), held identically by the facade, the loading state, the live plugin, and the failure state (Section 5). Nothing on the page moves when one state replaces another.
- The facade-to-live swap must never change the card's outer dimensions; if Meta's rendered plugin is shorter than the box, the remaining space is the card's own padding, not a collapse.

FRESHNESS (Charles's hourly-posts requirement, by mechanism):
- A live plugin fetches the page's current posts from Facebook at the moment it loads. A visitor therefore always sees the newest post as of their arrival or tap - fresher than any site-side hourly copy, and no copied post text is ever stored on this site.
- Do NOT auto-reload a live embed on a timer while a visitor is looking at it: reloading restarts any video they are playing and reads as a glitch. The single permitted exception is Charles's own Pages section on the home page, which MAY refresh its embed at most once an hour, only while the tab is visible, and never while a video inside it is playing or the visitor is interacting with it.
- The bot's twice-daily update cadence governs the site's own data (listings, hours, snapshots); Facebook content itself is live by construction and needs no site-side refresh job.

HONEST LIMITS OF THE PLUGIN ITSELF (report, don't hide):
- Meta decides the plugin's contents: it shows a handful of recent posts, captions may be truncated, and some taps hand the visitor off to Facebook. Independent testing in 2026 also found video playback inside the plugin inconsistent. None of that is this site's defect, and none of it is fixable from this side. At build time, test three sample pages with video posts and report to Charles exactly what Meta currently serves, so his expectation ("latest post, videos playable") is matched against reality in writing, not assumed.

3. ANIMATION AND GESTURE PERFORMANCE
THE ONE RULE: animate transform and opacity ONLY. These two are handled by the phone's graphics chip without re-laying-out or repainting the page. Animating width, height, top, left, margin, or padding forces layout work every frame; animating box-shadow or filters forces repaint work every frame. On a flagship phone the difference hides; on the reference phone it is the difference between smooth and lagging. Forbidden list for animation: layout properties, box-shadow, filter, background-position parallax. (A shadow may change instantly on a state change; it may not be tweened.)

FRAME BUDGET: 60 frames per second means each frame gets about 16.7 ms total. Any script task longer than 50 ms is a "long task" (web.dev's definition) and directly delays the response to the next tap (INP). Rules that follow:
- No script work during scroll except class toggles decided by IntersectionObserver (reveal-on-scroll, embed activation, back-to-top visibility). Raw scroll listeners, if ever used, must be passive and throttled to one animation frame.
- Anything that processes lists (filtering 1,074 listings, rendering a batch of cards) works in slices of at most ~50 ms and yields back to the browser between slices (the scheduler.yield pattern, with a setTimeout fallback), so a tap is never queued behind a render.
- Carousels and swipe strips: native CSS scroll-snap on a scrolling row - the browser's own physics, zero script cost, works with touch, mouse, and keyboard. No JavaScript drag libraries. Auto-advance is off by default; if the Spotlight rotates, it uses transform, pauses on touch/hover/focus, and stops entirely under reduced motion.
- Photo zoom: a lightbox that scales the image with transform (and lets the visitor pinch or double-tap), transform-origin following the pinch point; the page behind never zooms or scrolls. Buttons for zoom in/out serve visitors who cannot pinch.
- Tab bar and sticky headers: fixed/sticky positioning with transform-based hide/show only (slide on scroll direction), present in the first paint. A sticky bar that appears late is a layout shift; one that is always there is furniture.
- will-change: use sparingly, only on the one or two elements about to animate (spotlight slide, lightbox image). Blanket will-change wastes graphics memory on cheap phones and makes everything slower.

REDUCED MOTION (accessibility and honesty): when the visitor's device asks for reduced motion (the prefers-reduced-motion setting - MDN documents it as minimizing or removing non-essential movement):
- All non-essential animation is off: no slide/fade reveals, no rotating spotlight (it becomes a static panel with prev/next buttons), no smooth scrolling (jumps are instant), carousels still swipe (visitor-driven) but never auto-play.
- Keep only what communicates state: a brief opacity change on a pressed button, the loading shimmer on a facade if it is subtle (or a static "Loading..." label - prefer the label).
- Test with the setting on, once per release (Section 5 list).

4. STATIC-SITE ARCHITECTURE AND THE IMAGE/FONT PIPELINE
BUILD TIME VS. RUNTIME (the load-bearing decision):
The site today reads data files (JSON) in the browser and builds listing cards with script at view time. Every job that can be done ahead of time should be: work done once by the bot at update time is work a thousand cheap phones never have to do.
- TARGET: the bot GENERATES the listing cards as finished HTML when it publishes an update (the site is updated twice a day; generation rides that cadence). The JSON files remain the single source the generator reads; the generated pages carry a "generated - edit the data, not this file" note (Section 6). Search, filters, favorites, Open Now badges, and embed activation then ENHANCE pages that are already complete and readable with scripts off or failed. This is also the reliability fix: if a script or a data fetch fails, the listings are still on the page (Section 5).
- UNTIL generation is in place, runtime rendering follows the batching and yielding rules in Sections 3 and 6, and the data fetch failure state in Section 5 is mandatory, not optional.
- What stays runtime (it must, because it depends on the visitor): search and filters over the page's listings, Open Now from the visitor's clock, favorites from the visitor's device, the countdown, embed activation, the map.
- What moves to build time (it never depends on the visitor): cards, hours tables, badges' underlying data, "New in Town" (date math against the publish date), printable town sheets, the sitemap, sharing tags, and the reviews grade math if reviews are built (approved reviews are data like any other).

SERVICE WORKER CACHING (GitHub Pages gives every file the same fixed Cache-Control: max-age=600 - ten minutes - and offers no way to change headers; the service worker is how this site gets real caching anyway):
- PRECACHE (installed once, versioned): the app shell - shared stylesheet, shared script, brand icons, the offline page. The cache NAME carries the release version (tied to the twice-daily publish stamp). A new version installs beside the old; the old is deleted on activation. Never precache the logo library or photo sets (the web-ready logo set alone is about 12 MB): those cache at runtime as visitors actually view them.

- PAGES (HTML): network-first, falling back to the cached copy. Charles's updates are twice-daily and accuracy is a safety property of this site; a visitor online should get the fresh page, and a visitor offline should get the last good copy rather than nothing.
- DATA (JSON): network-first with a short timeout (about 5 seconds) falling back to cache. Data is the site's facts; stale facts are a defect, missing facts are a bigger one.
- IMAGES (logos, photos, icons): cache-first / stale-while-revalidate - serve the cached copy instantly, refresh it in the background. Cap the image cache (about 300 entries or ~30 MB, oldest out) so the site never fills a small phone.
- NEVER INTERCEPT: anything cross-origin - facebook.com and connect.facebook.net (embed content must always be Meta's live answer, and the worker must never stand between the visitor and it), weather.gov, Google Maps links, form submissions. The worker handles this site's own GET requests only.
- UPDATES: a new worker version takes over on the visitor's NEXT page load, not mid-visit (no forced reloads: reloading a page out from under a visitor who is mid-form or mid-video is a defect). Because pages are network-first, freshness does not depend on worker timing anyway.
- OFFLINE: pages already visited work whole, including their logos and the visitor's favorites. An unvisited page gets the branded offline page: what still works (saved places, pages already viewed), plus tap-to-call links for the key help numbers already in the site's resource data - phone links work with no data connection at all.

IMAGE PIPELINE (applied by the bot whenever a photo is added):
- FORMATS: AVIF first, WebP fallback, original JPEG/PNG last (the picture element serves the first the browser can use). WebP is typically 25-34% smaller than JPEG at the same quality; AVIF typically ~50% smaller than JPEG and 20-30% smaller than WebP (Google/format-study figures). Logos with a vector source stay SVG (23 exist today) - a vector has no pixels to save. AVIF encodes slowly: always at build time, never on the visitor's device.
- SIZES: generate each photo at the widths the design actually uses (cards ~480/800, hero ~1200/1600) and let the browser pick by screen size (srcset/sizes). Never ship a 1600-pixel photo into a 400-pixel card.
- PLACEHOLDERS: every image sits in a reserved box of the right shape (width/height or aspect-ratio in the markup) filled with the photo's average color or a tiny blurred version of itself (blur-up). The picture fades in over its placeholder; the page never jumps.
- LOADING: the hero image (the page's LCP) loads eagerly with high fetch priority and is never lazy; everything below the first screen is loading="lazy" with async decoding. Lazy-loading the LCP image is a defect.

- LOGOS: same rules at logo scale - right-sized variants (Section 1), transparency preserved (WebP/PNG, never JPEG for a logo with a transparent ground).

FONT LOADING (the site is fastest with no web font at all):
- Default: the system font stack (each phone's own font). Zero download, zero shift, always readable.
- If a brand font is adopted: self-host the WOFF2 files on this site (no third-party font service: that is an extra connection, a render block, and a third party in the critical path).
  Subset to Latin characters. Preload ONLY the one weight used by headings/first paint. Set font-display: swap, and match the fallback font's metrics with size-adjust / ascent-override / descent-override so the swap does not move text (font-driven CLS is the classic self-inflicted wound here; web.dev's font guidance exists precisely because of it). Body text may use font-display: optional instead: on a slow first visit the system font simply stays, and the brand font appears from the next visit onward - no swap, no shift.

==========
5. RELIABILITY ENGINEERING - WHEN THE OUTSIDE WORLD FAILS
==========
GOVERNING RULE: this site must be fully usable with EVERY third party blocked or down. Listings, phone numbers, hours, directions links, search, favorites - all of it is the site's own content and none of it may depend on Facebook, a weather service, or a map provider being up. Third parties decorate; they never carry the load. Test this explicitly (checklist below) by blocking those domains and using the site.

FACEBOOK FAILURE LADDER (per embed, in order):
1. SDK/iframe blocked or never loads (ad blocker, tracking protection, Facebook outage, no signal): detect it - the activation sets a timer (about 6 seconds); if the live plugin has not produced a loaded frame by then, the embed area settles into its FAILURE STATE, which is the snapshot card from Section 2 wearing its error wording: the page's picture and name, a line that the live post could not load, and one big button, "See it on Facebook," linking to the page. This is exactly the fallback Section 4 item 5 of the instructions already orders for pages that cannot be embedded.
2. Plugin loads but renders blank (the Facebook page was deleted, renamed, age- or country-restricted, or set private): an empty white box is a defect, never an outcome.
   The same watchdog applies: a frame that loads to nothing within the timeout is replaced by the failure-state card, AND the listing's name goes into the bot's report for the six-hour check, because a page that stopped embedding is often a page whose address changed - an accuracy finding, not just a display problem.
3. Failure states keep the reserved box size (Section 2), carry the listing's own phone/directions buttons untouched beside them, and never retry in a loop (one quiet retry on the visitor's tap of the button, at most).

OTHER THIRD PARTIES:
- Weather source down: the strip collapses to a single dated line linking out ("See the current forecast at weather.gov") in the same reserved space. A stale forecast is never shown as if current: if the data is older than its refresh window, the strip says when it was fetched or collapses.
- Map tiles/library down: the listings under the map are a real list in their own right (never map-only), so a dead map costs the pins, not the information. The map area shows its own "Map didn't load - the list below has every address" state.
- This site's own data fetch fails (runtime-rendered pages, until generation lands): the exact state from the UX research (02_ux_accessibility.md) - "This list didn't load. Check your connection and tap Try again." - with a large Try again button that re-runs the fetch, plus the plain fallback link where one exists. An empty page with a spinner forever is the one forbidden outcome.

ERROR REPORTING WITHOUT TRACKING: failures the site detects (dead embed on a named listing, data file failed after retry) are written to the browser console in a consistent format and, more usefully, are exactly the items the bot's existing before/after scans and six-hour check already look for from the outside. No visitor-side analytics or error beacons are added - Charles's no-tracking rule stands; reliability is verified by the bot's own checks, not by watching visitors.

PRE-PUBLISH VERIFICATION CHECKLIST (performance and reliability extension of instruction Sections 3 and 11; run with those, not instead of them):
[ ] Lighthouse mobile run (Moto-class phone, Slow 4G profile) on THREE pages: home, the busiest listing page, one listing detail. Record LCP, CLS, and total transfer next to the Section 1 budgets. Over budget anywhere = not published.
[ ] First load of those pages with the network panel open: zero live Facebook iframes at load; zero requests to connect.facebook.net before an embed activates; own-file totals inside budget; request count inside budget.
[ ] Scroll test on the busiest listing page, reference phone: embeds activate as they near the screen; never more than 2 loading at once, never more than 6 live; scrolling stays smooth (no visible stutter); nothing on the page jumps as embeds arrive (CLS spot-check).
[ ] Blocked-world test: with facebook.com, connect.facebook.net, the weather source, and the map provider all blocked, the three test pages still show every listing with working phone and directions links; every embed area shows its failure-state card with a working "See it on Facebook" button; no blank white boxes; no endless spinners.
[ ] One deliberately broken embed (a page address known to be restricted) shows the failure state and lands in the report by name.

[ ] Offline test: visit home + one listing page, go offline, reload both - content and logos present; open an unvisited page - the offline page appears with working tap-to-call links; favorites still open.
[ ] Update test: after publishing, revisit a changed page - the new content is what loads (network-first working), and the new service worker version is in place by the next load, with no forced reload mid-visit.
[ ] Reduced-motion pass: with the device set to reduce motion, no auto-rotation, no slide/fade reveals, instant jumps;
    carousels still swipe by hand.
[ ] Keyboard and focus pass on the tab bar, one carousel, the lightbox, and one facade button: everything reachable, everything operable, focus always visible.
[ ] Slow-data smoke test at a throttled ~400 kbps: home page usable (content readable, buttons live) without waiting for every image; nothing essential waits on an embed.

6. CODING-IMPLEMENTATION GUIDANCE FOR THE BOTS
PATTERNS REQUIRED:
- PROGRESSIVE ENHANCEMENT, in layers: (1) semantic HTML that already contains the content; (2) CSS that makes it presentable;
  (3) JavaScript that makes it richer. Any layer may fail and the ones below it still serve the visitor. A feature that exists only in layer 3 must degrade to a link or a static version in layer 1 (the embed's facade is this rule, applied).
- SEMANTIC HTML FIRST: header/nav/main/footer landmarks; lists for listings; a button is a <button>, a link is an ; headings in order. This is what keeps the site's existing accessibility strength (111 ARIA attributes in the audit) from being designed away.
- NO FRAMEWORK, NO BUILD-STEP DEPENDENCIES. Hand-written HTML, CSS, and vanilla JavaScript in ES modules, exactly the stack the audit verified (about 92 KB of code for the whole site).
  Anything the bots write must be editable by the other bot with no tooling beyond a text editor and the repository.
- EVENT DELEGATION: one listener on a list container handles every card's taps (call/save/share/see-post) instead of one listener per card. With 1,074 listings this is the difference between a handful of listeners and thousands, and it makes batch rendering cheap because new cards need no wiring.
- BATCHED RENDERING: cards render in batches of about 24 via a document fragment, with an IntersectionObserver sentinel for "show more" (a real button too - the footer must always stay reachable, so endless scroll that swallows the footer is forbidden), and long lists use content-visibility so off-screen cards cost almost nothing to lay out.
- SAFE TEXT INSERTION: any text that came from a person (a registration, a pet-board post, a review) is inserted as text, never as raw HTML. The site will publish public submissions; this one habit is what keeps a submission from becoming somebody else's script on Charles's page.

- ONE SHARED SCRIPT + PAGE MODULES: the shared script (deferred) on every page; page-specific code (map, lightbox) in its own module loaded only on its own page. The only inline script allowed is the small theme initializer in the head that prevents a dark-mode flash - 1 KB at most, and it exists because the alternative is a visible flash on every load.
- TIMERS: one shared 60-second ticker per page drives the countdown and Open Now refresh. Per-card timers are forbidden.
- STATE LIVES IN ONE PLACE: favorites and theme in local storage under versioned keys; nothing about a visitor leaves the device (standing rule).

PATTERNS FORBIDDEN:
- Any framework or CDN library (jQuery, carousel/slider/photo libraries, animation libraries) for a single effect. Each one is an extra connection, an unversioned dependency, and an outage this site does not control - and each can eat the whole JS budget by itself.
- Duplicated inline scripts copied page to page. If two pages need it, it goes in the shared script. (The current site shares one app.js; keep it that way.)
- Render-blocking anything: no script without defer/module, no stylesheet trickery that delays first paint, no synchronous requests, no document.write.
- Animating layout properties or tweening shadows/filters (Section 3), parallax backgrounds, scroll-jacking, autoplay anything with sound (already forbidden), autoplaying carousels that ignore touch and focus.
- Precaching whole collections (the 725-logo library) or caching any third-party response in the service worker (Section 4).
- Specificity wars and !important escalation in the stylesheet: fix the selector, not the symptom. A future bot (or the other bot) must be able to predict what a rule does.

TWO BOTS, ONE SITE (Grok and Copilot must not collide):
- OWNERSHIP BY FILE FAMILY, written down in the repository: data files (the JSON set) and the pages generated from them belong to the bot running the approved data update; the hand-written templates, stylesheet, and scripts belong to the bot running the approved code update. A session works in one family or the other, and says which in its report.
- ONE BUILD STAMP: a single small file (or a single line in the shared script) holds the site's build/version stamp. The bot that publishes bumps it; the service worker's cache version derives from it. Two versions of the truth about "what is live" is how stale-cache bugs are born.
- A BUILD LOG IN THE REPOSITORY: before starting work, the active bot reads the log's last entry; when finished, it appends one: date, which bot, family touched (data/code), files changed, checks run (including the Section 5 list). This is the bots' shared memory and it costs a paragraph.
- GENERATED FILES ARE MARKED: every generated page carries a short "GENERATED from the data files - edit the data, not this file" note at its top. A bot that hand-edits a generated file has created next update's silent overwrite.

- NEVER EDIT THE SAME FILE IN THE SAME UPDATE WINDOW: all work lands through the repository's version history, so an overlap shows up as a conflict to resolve in the open - never as one bot silently erasing the other's morning work. If a conflict appears, stop and report it to Charles like any other Section 3 finding.

SPEC 10_freshness_automation.md
----

10 — Freshness Automation: How the Site Stays Up to Date

Prepared for Charles Adams, Shop Local Hanceville (https://shoplocalhanceville.github.io/). This file turns Charles's three standing orders into a concrete, honest operating schedule for his Grok AI website bot:

- (a) "All safety and refreshing is done by the AI Grok bot to make sure the website stays up-to-date."
- (b) "The website will be updated twice a day."
- (c) Embedded social media posts "will be shown and updated every hour between 6 AM to 6 PM Alabama time" (America/Chicago).

It sits on top of the rules Charles already approved: the before-and-after scan discipline (Grok instructions Sections 2-3; Copilot instructions Sections 3 and 11), the approval rules (nothing a visitor submits publishes without Charles's word — Grok instructions Sections 4A and 9), and the independent six-hour watchdog check Muse runs (job shoplocal-website-quality-check).
Grok is the operator. Muse's check is the independent auditor.
They are deliberately not the same job.

1. THE TRUTH ABOUT FACEBOOK EMBED FRESHNESS
==
This section matters because order (c) sounds like work, and for real embeds it mostly is not. Here is what actually happens, verified against Facebook's plugin documentation and hands-on testing by embed specialists:

1. A Page Plugin embed is not a copy of anything. The website stores only a small placeholder (the page's Facebook address and display settings). When a visitor opens a listing, the visitor's own browser loads Facebook's JavaScript SDK (or the plugin iframe) and Facebook serves the page's current posts at that moment. Facebook's own description of the plugin is that it promotes the page's live timeline content on the site.
   (Facebook Page Plugin documentation:
   https://developers.facebook.com/docs/plugins/page-plugin — Meta's developer pages refuse automated fetchers, so the mechanics here are corroborated by the specialist sources in the Sources list, which test this plugin professionally.)

2. CONSEQUENCE: for a true embed, there is nothing for Grok to "update" when a business posts. The next visitor sees the new post automatically, whether Grok does anything or not, at 6 AM, at midnight, on a holiday. "Updated every hour" is already how embeds behave; the hourly order in Section 3 is therefore a VERIFICATION duty (are the embeds loading and showing the latest posts?), not a republishing duty.
3. What CAN make an embed look stale or broken — the real risks:
   a. SNAPSHOT CARDS. The one exception in Grok Section 5: a page that technically cannot be embedded gets a hand-made "Latest update" card (post date, summary, picture). That card is frozen at the moment Grok saved it. Snapshot cards are the ONLY social content on the site that can go stale, and refreshing them is real work (see Sections 2 and 3).
   b. THE SITE'S OWN CACHING. The installable web app feature (Grok Section 11, item 4) adds a service worker so pages load instantly on repeat visits. A careless service worker could serve an old saved copy of a page. Rule: the service worker uses network-first loading for page HTML, keeps only versioned caches (a new version name every publish, old caches deleted on activation), and NEVER caches the Facebook SDK, the plugin iframes, or anything from facebook.net / facebook.com. Embed containers themselves — the placeholder markup — must never be frozen into a long-lived cached snapshot with post content baked in.
   c. FACEBOOK-SIDE DELAY. Facebook assembles the plugin on its own servers and its own schedule; specialists note the plugin renders a limited initial set of posts, truncates captions, and can lag behind the page itself. Grok cannot fix Facebook-side lag; the hourly verification (Section 3) detects it and the post date shown on the listing tells visitors how fresh what they see is (already a rule in Grok Section 5).
   d. RESTRICTED PAGES VANISH FOR SOME VISITORS. A page with age, country, or alcohol restrictions, or one that stops being public, shows blank to visitors Facebook cannot verify — including logged-out visitors. That is an embed failure the hourly check can catch (Section 3) and the fix is the snapshot-card exception, reported to Charles.
   e. PLUGIN QUIRKS. The plugin is an iframe capped at 500 px wide and it sizes itself once when the page loads (Smash Balloon's specialist FAQ). On phones it can render awkwardly after rotation. Grok's after-scan phone test (Grok Section 2) is the standing check for this.
   f. PLATFORM RISK, STATED PLAINLY. Meta announced in November 2025 that its Like and Comment plugins stop rendering after February 10, 2026. The Page Plugin is NOT on that list and is not being discontinued in 2026, but Meta has made no long-term promise. The snapshot-card exception is the standing backup plan if the Page Plugin ever follows them.

2. "UPDATED TWICE A DAY" — THE TWO GROK UPDATE PASSES

A static GitHub Pages site has no server and no database. "Updated" can only mean: Grok reviews what changed in the world, edits the site's files, commits them to GitHub, and GitHub Pages rebuilds and serves the new version. Publishing mechanics, from GitHub's own documentation: deployments time out if they take longer than 10 minutes (in practice a small static site builds and goes live in about a minute or two); the free tier's soft limits are a 1 GB published site, 100 GB bandwidth per month, and 10 builds per hour for branch-based publishing. Two passes a day is nowhere near any of those limits. Every publish is a Git commit, which is also the safety net (Section 4).

Charles approves this schedule ONCE, as a standing order. Within it, Grok may publish the routine refreshes listed below without asking each time. Anything outside this list — adding or removing a listing, changing contact information, accepting a registration — still needs Charles's specific approval first (Grok Sections 4A and 9). The two passes:

MORNING PASS — 6:45 AM America/Chicago (before the 7 AM hour of the social window, early enough that the day starts current):

1. Before-scan (Grok Section 2): security scan for tampering, changed or redirected links, unrecognized code. Anything suspicious: STOP, publish nothing, report to Charles at once.
2. Events: mark events that ended overnight as past; confirm today's and this week's events still match their sources (dates, times, cancellations announced on organizers' pages).
3. Bulldogs scores and any sports results posted overnight: update the scores data from the schools' own pages/posts. Never invent a score; a result Grok cannot verify waits.
4. Weather strip source check: confirm the National Weather Service feed (Grok Section 11, item 5) is answering and the strip shows current conditions; if a watch or warning for Cullman County is in effect, confirm the strip shows it and links to Cullman County EMA.
5. Snapshot cards: refresh every snapshot-card listing (Grok Section 5 exception) whose page has posted since the card was saved — new date, faithful summary, web-sized picture.
6. Registrations: publish only the submissions Charles has already approved since the last pass; leave the rest queued.
7. Spot fixes: repair anything yesterday's checks or Muse's overnight watchdog flagged and that Grok's own test confirms (a dead link replaced only by its verified Part B replacement, a broken logo file re-saved from the Master File).
8. After-scan (Grok Section 2): security scan again, changed pages tested at phone and computer width, images web-sized.
9. Commit with a plain message ("Morning update Oct 20: 2 events updated, 1 snapshot refreshed") and confirm the new version is live before reporting.

AFTERNOON PASS — 4:30 PM America/Chicago (inside the social window, late enough to catch the business day, early enough that Charles can still act on a report the same day):

1-2. Same before-scan, same stop rule.
3. Events and scores: same-day changes — postponements, time changes, afternoon results.
4. New posts sweep: check the Facebook pages of listings whose main link is their Facebook page (Charles's 30-day rule, Grok Section 6) and any page that posted news affecting its listing (changed hours, holiday closures, a move). Listing facts change only when the change comes from the organization's own website or page (Grok Section 12).
5. Snapshot cards: refresh any that changed since the morning pass.
6. Registrations Charles approved during the day: publish them.
7. Logo changes: if an organization changed its logo on its own site or page, fetch the new real logo, normalize it (Grok Section 4, rule 5), and swap it in.
8. After-scan, commit ("Afternoon update ..."), confirm live.
9. THE DAILY REPORT (Grok Section 8 format) goes to Charles after this pass — one report a day covering both passes and the hourly verifications (Section 3), problems first. If the whole day was clean and nothing changed except routine refreshes, the report is one line. The morning pass sends no separate report unless it hit the stop rule or a problem Charles must decide.

3. HOURLY SOCIAL VERIFICATION, 6 AM TO 6 PM ALABAMA TIME

Window: 6:00 AM through 6:00 PM America/Chicago, every day (Alabama observes daylight saving; the schedule follows local clock time, so it moves with the season automatically when set in the America/Chicago time zone).

WHAT IS AUTOMATIC (no one's job): every true embed pulls the page's latest posts live in each visitor's browser (Section 1). A business that posts at 9:03 AM is visible to the 9:04 AM visitor whether or not any check ran.

WHAT GROK VERIFIES EACH HOUR (verification only — looking, not republishing):
1. Charles's own pages first (Hanceville Entertainment & Shopping; Cullman County Meme Factory): their embeds on the site load, and the newest post visible in the embed matches the newest post on the Facebook page itself.
2. A rotating sample: one twelfth of the embedded listings each hour, so every embedded listing is eyeballed at least once across the 6-to-6 window — embed loads (not blank), latest post in the embed matches the page's latest post, post date on the listing is honest.
3. Any listing flagged since the last hour — by a visitor report, by Muse's watchdog, or by the previous hourly check.
4. Snapshot-card listings: has the page posted since the card was saved? If yes, the card is stale — queue it for refresh at the next update pass (or immediately, if the post changes facts on the listing, such as closure or changed hours).

WHAT AN HOURLY PASS CAN FIX on the spot (small, reversible, inside the standing approval): refresh a snapshot card whose source post is public and verified; correct an embed target address that verifiably changed to the page's new official address (reported in the daily report); re-run the Section 2 scans around any such fix and commit it alone, so it can be rolled back alone.

WHAT AN HOURLY PASS CANNOT FIX: a Facebook outage or Facebook-side plugin lag (Section 1c); a page that turned private or restricted (the fix is Charles's decision: snapshot card or a different main link); a page that simply stopped posting (the 30-day rule handles that at listing level, reported, never silently removed); anything on GitHub's side (Section 5). An hourly check that finds one of these does not retry it every hour — it logs it once and escalates per the ladder below.

ESCALATION LADDER (how Charles hears about problems without being spammed hourly):
- Level 0 — log only: transient embed lag, a sample embed slow once. Noted in the day's log; never sent to Charles by itself.
- Level 1 — fix and note: snapshot refreshed, embed address corrected. Appears as one line in the daily report.
- Level 2 — same-day message to Charles, at the next update pass at the latest: an embed broken for a full hour across two checks; a page gone private/restricted; a listing's facts contradicted by the organization's own post (closure, move, new hours); anything Charles must decide.
- Level 3 — immediate message, any hour, breaking the schedule: any sign of hacking, tampering, or hijacked/redirected links (the Grok Section 2 stop rule). Safety outranks the schedule.

The daily report after the afternoon pass carries the day's Level 0-2 totals in Grok Section 8 format, problems first.

4. SAFETY ON EVERY REFRESH — AND GIT AS THE SAFETY NET

Every cycle in Sections 2 and 3 runs under the existing scan discipline; freshness never outranks it:

1. Before-scan before any publish, after-scan after any publish (Grok Section 2; Copilot Section 11's error-check list). Even a one-line fix gets both scans. No exceptions for "small" changes (Grok Section 12).
2. Hijack watchlist on every pass: the never-link list in Grok Section 6 (nahba.org, davesbodyshop.com, tellico4x4.com, highwaypicker.com, countrylivinginc.org, balloonbazaar.net, velvetsummer.com, sunflourbakeryandeatery.com, topusabrowse.top, usabizora.top, cullmanorthodox.com) is re-tested at both update passes; a NEW redirect or takeover on any listed domain is a Level 3 event.
3. No auto-publishing of outside input on any cycle: Register page submissions, Lost and Found Pets posts, and reviews all wait for Charles's approval, exactly as the instruction files already require. The twice-daily passes publish only what Charles has already approved plus the routine refreshes in Section 2's standing list.

4. Master File wins: if live information conflicts with the Master File, Grok flags it in the daily report and does not silently adopt it (Grok Section 9).
5. GIT IS THE SAFETY NET. Every publish is a commit; the full history of the site is preserved. Rules for Grok:
   - One logical change-set per commit, message in plain words (what changed and why), so any pass can be undone alone.
   - If an after-scan or a later check shows a publish broke something, roll back FIRST (revert that commit and confirm the site is healthy), then report: what was rolled back, what it was supposed to do, and what happens next. Charles hears "the site is back to the last good version" in the same message that tells him something went wrong.
   - Never rewrite or delete history; a rollback is a new commit that undoes the bad one, so the record of what happened survives.
   - The Master File on Charles's side is the second copy: if the repository itself were ever damaged, the site can be rebuilt from the Master File.

5. FAILURE MODES AND HONEST LIMITS

1. GROK RUNS ONLY IF ITS SCHEDULED WORK EXISTS. A bot does not wake itself up. Grok offers scheduled Tasks (created in the Grok app or at grok.com: a saved instruction that runs once, daily, on weekdays, weekly, or monthly at a set time in a chosen time zone) and newer Automations that run on schedules or triggers. For this plan to be real, Charles (or Grok at his direction in one setup session) must create, inside his own Grok account:
   - the Morning Pass task, daily 6:45 AM America/Chicago;
   - the Afternoon Pass task, daily 4:30 PM America/Chicago;
   - the hourly verification, 6 AM-6 PM — either as an hourly automation if his Grok plan offers hourly triggers, or as scheduled tasks at the hours his plan allows.

   HONEST LIMIT: published plan details say a free X account gets two daily scheduled tasks — which fits the two update passes exactly — while more tasks and unlimited tasks belong to paid tiers (SuperGrok / X Premium+), and hourly triggers are a newer Automations capability whose availability varies by account. If Charles's plan cannot run thirteen hourly checks, the honest fallback — his decision, stated here so nobody pretends otherwise — is verification at the two update passes plus Muse's six-hour watchdog (below), because the embeds themselves still refresh live for every visitor (Section 1). Nothing about visitor freshness depends on the hourly checks existing.

   Also honest: a scheduled Grok run can fail, be delayed, or be skipped by the platform. The daily report must say which cycles actually ran ("Hourly checks completed: 11 of 13"), never imply a cycle ran that did not. Two missed hourly checks in a row, or a missed update pass, is a Level 2 event.

2. GITHUB PAGES OUTAGES. Rare, but they happen. During an outage a publish may fail or lag; the last good version keeps serving visitors in most cases. Grok's duty: do not force repeated publishes, note it, retry at the next cycle, and if a failed publish coincides with something Charles must know, say so in the daily report. Status reference: https://www.githubstatus.com/
3. FACEBOOK EMBED OUTAGES. If Facebook's plugin service fails, embeds show blank or error boxes while the rest of the site — listings, logos, links — is unaffected. Grok cannot repair Facebook. If the failure lasts past two hourly checks it is Level 2; the site stays honest because listing facts never live only inside an embed.
4. THE WATCHDOG RELATIONSHIP. Muse's independent six-hour check (job shoplocal-website-quality-check) re-crawls the site, re-tests outbound links, compares listings and logos against the master directory, and reports problems to Charles. It does not edit the site. Division of labor: Grok operates and refreshes; Muse audits Grok's work from the outside. If the watchdog finds something Grok's cycles missed — or Grok reports something the watchdog cannot confirm — the disagreement itself is reported to Charles, per the Copilot instructions (Section 3, rule 4). Two sets of eyes is the point; neither silently overrules the other.
5. WHAT "UP TO DATE" CANNOT MEAN. A listing is only as current as its source. If a business changes its hours and tells nobody, no cycle can know. The site handles this honestly the way the instruction files already require: post dates shown, "last checked" discipline in the scans, and Charles's Register page inviting owners to send corrections — which then wait for his approval like everything else.

6. THE COMBINED OPERATING SCHEDULE (all times America/Chicago)

6:00 AM	Hourly social verification begins (Section 3)
6:45 AM	GROK MORNING UPDATE PASS (Section 2)
7 AM-6 PM	Hourly social verification, top of each hour
~every 6 hours	CLAUDE WATCHDOG CHECK (independent; quiet unless something needs Charles's attention)
4:30 PM	GROK AFTERNOON UPDATE PASS + DAILY REPORT (Section 2)
6:00 PM	Last hourly verification of the day
Any time	LEVEL 3: suspected hacking, tampering, or a hijacked link — immediate stop and immediate message to Charles

One-time setup checklist for Charles (approve once, then it runs): (1) approve this schedule and the standing publish list in Section 2; (2) create or confirm the Grok scheduled tasks in his Grok account, in the America/Chicago time zone; (3) confirm the hourly option his plan supports (Section 5, item 1) or choose the fallback; (4) confirm reports come to the same place Grok reports already go. After setup, Charles's only routine job is reading one daily report and approving queued items when he chooses.

SPEC 11_gloss_theme.md

11 — The Gloss Finish System and Bar Design
Shop Local Hanceville (https://shoplocalhanceville.github.io/)

Owner's direction (Charles Adams, October 19, 2026): the site KEEPS its black, purple, and white colors — and the Wallace State orange, blue, and white exception — but the FINISH changes: shiny, glossy, sleek, and modern, "super super professional," tuned for engagement, visibility, flow, and fast loading. Toolbars and tabs are upgraded as part of the same finish.

WHAT THIS FILE IS: an amendment to Spec 01 (Design System). It replaces Spec 01's finish — its flat surfaces, its Section 4C shadow treatment, and the surface styling inside Sections 6A, 6B, 6D, 7C, and 8 — with the gloss system below. It does NOT replace Spec 01's structure: layout, spacing scale, type scale, card anatomy, icon system (Section 12A, Lucide), motion budget (Section 13), and evenness standard (Section 17) all stand exactly as written, and this file conforms to them. It also conforms to Spec 09's hard budgets: total CSS at most 40 KB compressed, total JS at most 150 KB, transform/opacity-only animation, no layout-shifting effects. The whole gloss finish costs ZERO images and ZERO JavaScript; it is gradients, shadows, and highlights inside the existing stylesheet (estimated addition: under 3 KB).

Every contrast figure in this file was computed with the WCAG relative-luminance formula and is stated next to its pairing, so the bot never has to take a pairing on faith.

1. THE FINISH IN ONE IDEA: GLOSSY FRAME, CALM PAGE

Gloss lives on the CHROME and the CONTROLS — the bars, buttons, chips, badges, frames, and the hero's search pill. The PAGE — listing text, descriptions, resource copy — stays matte and calm. A site that is shiny everywhere reads as an advertisement; a site whose frame is polished and whose reading surfaces are quiet reads as a professional product (the pattern on Apple's and Google's own service pages: glossy navigation and controls, flat reading surfaces). Three rules carry the whole system:

1. ONE GLOSS RECIPE, EVERYWHERE. Every glossy surface on the site is built from the same three layers (Section 2). If a surface's shine cannot be described as those three layers over a token color, it is off-system and is a defect.
2. GLOSS NEVER CARRIES MEANING AND NEVER TOUCHES READABILITY. No information may exist only as a shine, a gradient, or a shadow. Every gloss layer is decorative, sits behind or above a surface whose flat version would still pass every contrast rule, and is capped so the lightest point under any text still passes 4.5:1 (the caps in Section 2 are computed, not guessed).
3. GLOSS MUST BE FREE. No image files, no extra fonts, no script. Gradients and inset highlights are painted once by the browser and cost nothing while scrolling, because they are attached to the element itself rather than to a fixed overlay. Anything that requires the browser to repaint a large blurred or translucent region on every scroll frame is forbidden except the two named bars in Section 4, under their caps.

2. THE GLOSS RECIPE — THREE LAYERS, WITH CAPS
==========
Every glossy surface = BASE + SHEEN + EDGE, in this order:

- BASE: one flat token color from Section 3. The base alone, with its paired text color, already passes contrast. Gloss is never used to rescue a base that fails.
- SHEEN: a top-down linear gradient of pure white fading out — white at the capped alpha at the very top edge, reaching fully transparent at 55% of the surface's height. It is layered OVER the base as a background-image; it never replaces the base. THE CAP (a hard rule, verified below): on any surface that carries text, the sheen alpha at the top edge is at most 16% (alpha 0.16). On surfaces that carry no text (frames, the hero band, decorative panels) the cap is 28%.
  Why 16%: the primary button's base, purple #6D28D9, passes with white text at 7.10:1. Blending 16% white over it produces #844ADF at the lightest point, where white text still passes at 5.22:1. At 22% the composite falls to 4.58:1 — technically a pass with no safety margin on a sunlit cheap screen. 16% is the cap because it keeps every glyph on the button above 5:1 at every point of the gradient.

DEPTH (shadows): gloss surfaces that float (cards on the page, the two bars, modals) keep Spec 01 Section 4C's two-part soft shadow in the light theme (0 1px 2px at 6% black + 0 4px 16px at 6% black under cards). ONE AMENDMENT to Spec 01 for the dark theme: Spec 01 forbade all dark-theme shadows; the gloss finish permits exactly ONE functional shadow — under the two floating bars (sticky header, bottom tab bar) and under modals — at 0 8px 28px, black at 45% alpha, because a floating bar over scrolling near-black content needs separation the eye can see. Dark cards and dark in-page surfaces still get NO shadow; elevation-by-lightness (surface tokens, Section 3) does that work, exactly as Spec 01 ruled. Shadow blur radii never exceed the values named here and in Spec 01 Section 4C — large soft shadows under scrolling content are a paint cost and are forbidden (Section 5).

GLASS — THE HONEST RULES:
- TRUE GLASS (a real backdrop blur) is allowed on AT MOST TWO surfaces in the whole site: the sticky header and the bottom tab bar (Section 4). Conditions, all mandatory: blur radius at most 12px; the surface color is laid over the blur at at least 82% opacity, so content passing beneath never ghosts through legibly and text on the bar never competes with moving shapes; and the bar carries its EDGE highlight line so its boundary is visible even where the blur is subtle.

- FAKE GLASS everywhere else: a surface that should feel glass-like (the in-page filter strip when stuck, the hero's search pill, the lightbox panel) uses a TRANSLUCENT GRADIENT OVER A NEARLY SOLID BASE — base color at 96–100% opacity with the standard SHEEN layer — and NO backdrop blur. To the eye it reads as polished glass; to a cheap phone GPU it is one flat painted element.
- FALLBACKS (mandatory, in this order): if the browser does not support backdrop blur, or the visitor has turned on reduced transparency (the prefers-reduced-transparency setting), or forced-colors mode is active, BOTH bars render in their SOLID surface token with the EDGE line and no blur and no translucency. The site must look finished — not broken, not plainer in a way that looks like a bug — in that state; the solid version is a designed state, not an error state.
- The service worker and Spec 09's rules are untouched: gloss adds no requests and no caching questions.

PER-SURFACE RECIPES (apply BASE + SHEEN + EDGE unless stated):
- LISTING CARDS: matte face, glossy rim. The card face is the flat surface token with NO sheen behind the text zone. Gloss appears only as (a) the EDGE top highlight at 40% of the standard strength (white 10% alpha, light theme; white 6%, dark) and (b) the Section 4C soft shadow in light theme. The card's logo box keeps Spec 01's treatment exactly.
- PRIMARY BUTTONS (purple): the full recipe at the 16% text cap — base #6D28D9, SHEEN white 16% → transparent at 55%, EDGE both lines, plus the resting shadow 0 1px 2px black 20% + 0 4px 12px purple-tinted black 18%. Pressed state in Section 5.
- SECONDARY BUTTONS: flat surface fill, 2px primary border (per Spec 01 Section 8A), EDGE top highlight only, no sheen, no shadow. The contrast between the one glossy primary and the flat secondaries is deliberate: gloss marks the main action.
- CHIPS (filters): unselected — flat, per Spec 01 Section 8B. Selected — the full primary recipe (same as the primary button), because a selected chip is a small primary button.
- BADGES (Open Now, New, Events count, review stars' container): full recipe at the 16% text cap over their base token, pill radius per Spec 01. A badge's WORDS carry its meaning (Spec 02 rule); gloss is decoration on the pill, never a substitute for the word or the icon.
- HERO: the photograph stays a photograph (Spec 04). Legibility comes from a FLAT gradient scrim — transparent at 35% of the hero's height deepening to the ink token at 88% alpha at the bottom — never from blur or gloss over the photo. Gloss in the hero lives on (a) the search pill: full recipe over the surface token, the glossiest element on the page, because it is the page's main control; and (b) a 3px sheen rule under the hero —

  a horizontal gradient bar in the primary purple with the SHEEN layer, no text on it (28% cap applies).
- MODALS AND THE PHOTO LIGHTBOX (Spec 08): SOLID surface token, full EDGE, the one permitted dark scrim behind (ink at 72% alpha, FLAT — no backdrop blur; see Conflicts, Section 6). The panel's own gloss rim is what makes it feel premium; blurring the page behind a dialog is the classic cheap-phone jank and is forbidden here.
- THE REGISTER GRAPHIC'S FRAME: the Register Now graphic sits in a gloss FRAME, built as a wrapper with 6px padding whose background is the primary gloss recipe (base #6D28D9 + SHEEN at the 28% no-text cap), radius 16px per Spec 01, the graphic itself inset with radius 10px. In the Wallace theme the frame uses the Wallace blue recipe (Section 3). The frame is how a no-logo listing still looks finished and intentional rather than empty.

3. TOKEN SETS TUNED FOR GLOSS AND CONTRAST
==
Roles are named once and used in both themes. "Primary" is the purple. Every text pairing below lists its computed contrast; the floor is 4.5:1 for text (Spec 02), 3:1 for the focus ring and other essential non-text indicators, and this set aims at 7:1 for body-adjacent text wherever the palette allows.

3A. SITE THEME — LIGHT (white surfaces)
- page-bg: #FAFAFC (soft white; cards sit visibly on it)
- surface: #FFFFFF (cards, bars, panels)
- surface-alt: #F3F1F8 (faint lavender-gray; bands, wells, skeleton blocks, embed resting boxes)
- surface-raised: #FFFFFF (modals; distinguished by shadow)
- ink: #17121F on surface 18.4:1 · on surface-alt 16.4:1
- ink-secondary: #4C4660 on surface 8.9:1 · on surface-alt 8.0:1
- primary: #6D28D9 text/links on surface 7.1:1 ·
                  white text on primary 7.1:1
- primary-deep: #5B21B6 pressed/active base; white text 9.0:1;
                  also the foot of the primary gradient where a gradient foot is used under the sheen
- primary-bright: #7C3AED DECORATION ONLY — gradient accents,
                  the hero sheen rule, large shapes; never text, never a text background (white on it is 5.7:1, legal but below this set's standard for text)
- border: #D9D4E3 (decorative hairlines)
- border-strong: #B7AED0 (chip and input borders per Spec 01)
- focus-ring: #6D28D9 on page-bg 6.8:1 (floor for rings: 3:1)
- gloss caps: SHEEN ≤16% over text surfaces, ≤28% over text-free surfaces; worst point under white button text = #844ADF composite, 5.2:1. PASS.

3B. SITE THEME — DARK (black surfaces)
- page-bg: #0A0A0E (near-black, faintly purple)
- surface: #14141B (cards, bars)
- surface-alt: #1A1A23 (bands, wells, resting boxes)

- surface-raised: #1D1D27 (modals, the tab bar's active pill backing where specified, menus)
- ink: #F5F3FA on page-bg 18.0:1 · on surface 16.7:1
- ink-secondary: #B9B4C7 on surface 9.1:1
- primary: #A78BFA text/links on surface 6.7:1 · on page-bg 7.3:1 (a light violet; the dark theme's purple must lighten, per Spec 01's rule that dark tokens are derived, never inverted)
- primary-fill: #6D28D9 the button/chip fill in BOTH themes, white text 7.1:1 — one button color site-wide, so a Call button is the same object in either theme; its SHEEN uses the same 16% cap (composite worst point 5.2:1, as in 3A)
- primary-deep: #5B21B6 pressed state of primary-fill
- border: #2A2A38
- border-strong: #44445C
- focus-ring: #C4B5FD on surface 9.9:1
- gloss: SHEEN on dark surfaces uses the same white gradient at the same caps; the EDGE top highlight drops to 12% alpha (a full-strength highlight on near-black reads as a scratch, not a polish). Elevation is by surface lightness steps above; the only shadow is the Section 2 floating-bar/modal shadow.

3C. WALLACE STATE THEME — ORANGE, BLUE, WHITE
Applies to Wallace State pages and information only, per the owner's amendment. It is a WHITE-BASED theme in both of the visitor's light/dark settings — the college's own identity is white-based, and the swap should read as stepping into Wallace State's own section, the way the college's site itself looks. The finish is IDENTICAL: same three layers, same caps, same shadow values, with blue and orange standing in for purple.
- page-bg: #F7FAFD
- surface: #FFFFFF
- surface-alt: #EFF4FB (faint blue-gray)
- ink: #101828 on surface 17.8:1 · on surface-alt 16.1:1
- ink-secondary: #43536B on surface 7.8:1 · on surface-alt 7.1:1
- primary (blue): #1E40AF text/links on surface 8.7:1 · white text on it 8.7:1. Blue carries ALL text duties.
- primary-bright: #1D4ED8 links/large headings where the brighter blue is wanted: 6.7:1 on white — passes, but #1E40AF is the default; #1D4ED8 is for large text and graphic accents.
- primary-deep: #1E3A8A pressed/active base for blue fills.
- accent (orange):#EA580C 3.6:1 on white — ACCENT ONLY: rules, underlines, icon strokes, large graphic shapes, the sheen-rule under a Wallace hero. NEVER body text, never small text, never a small badge's text color.
- accent-deep: #C2410C the one orange allowed to carry words: white text on it 5.2:1 — used for badge/chip fills where orange must hold a label (e.g., a "Lions" tag), and for orange text at 18px bold or larger where blue would be wrong.

- border: #D5DEE9 · border-strong: #A9BBD1
- focus-ring: #1E40AF (8.7:1 on white class)
- gloss caps: identical — SHEEN ≤16% over text (blue button worst point: #1E40AF + 20% white = #4B66BF composite, white text 5.3:1 — the cap stays 16% for consistency and margin), ≤28% text-free.

4. TOOLBARS AND TAB BAR — THE SLEEK REDESIGN
Anatomy (items, order, sizes) comes from Spec 01 Sections 6A, 6B, and 6D and Spec 08 and does not change. This section replaces their SURFACES with the gloss finish and settles the open design questions (glass, badges, the active treatment) in the sleeker direction the owner asked for.

THE CHROME BOUNDARY RULE (decided here, binding): the two global bars — the sticky header and the bottom tab bar — ALWAYS wear the site's black/purple/white finish, including on Wallace State pages. The Wallace orange/blue/white theme governs the page CONTENT between the bars. A visitor's sense of "where am I in the app" must never change color under their thumbs; the theme swap is a property of the destination, not of the vehicle. (This is the pattern of university systems and app stores: constant chrome, branded content.) In-page toolbars (4C) are content, and DO take the page's theme.

4A. Bottom tab bar (phones) — the flagship surface
- SURFACE: true glass, under the Section 2 caps — this is one of the two permitted backdrop-blur surfaces. Surface token at 88% opacity over a blur of at most 12px; SHEEN across the top 55%; the EDGE carried as a physical top border: a 1px line that is itself a horizontal gradient — border-strong at the ends, primary at 45% alpha at the center — above a 1px white highlight at 10% (light) / 6% (dark). The permitted floating-bar shadow (Section 2) applies upward. Fallback per Section 2: solid surface token, same border treatment, no blur. Geometry unchanged: 64px + safe-area inset, per Spec 01 Section 6B; content padding unchanged.
- ACTIVE TAB: the glossy purple pill. A 56×32px pill behind the icon, filled with the FULL primary recipe — base primary-fill #6D28D9 in both themes, SHEEN at the 16% cap, EDGE highlight — radius 999px, and the icon drawn in white at 24px. The label beneath turns ink at weight 700 (Spec 01's rule: fill + weight + color, never color alone — here the pill's white icon, the filled shape, and the bold label are three signals). Inactive icons: ink-secondary, no pill, no gloss. The pill is the ONLY glossy element inside the bar, so the eye lands on exactly one place: where you are.
- BADGES: the Events count badge and the gold new-listings dot (Spec 08) restyle as gloss pills: count badge = white numerals on primary-deep #5B21B6 (9.0:1) with the EDGE highlight, 18px minimum height, radius 999px, seated at the icon's top-right, never covering the icon's recognizable shape; the new-listings marker stays a DOT (8px, primary-bright with the EDGE highlight) and never becomes a number it cannot support. The screen-reader names stay exactly as Spec 08 wrote them — gloss changes nothing announced.

- PRESS FEEDBACK: on tap, a tab's pill area shows the pressed treatment of Section 5 for 120ms before navigation paints — feedback at the speed of the tap, transform/opacity only.

4B. Sticky top bar (desktop and tablet; the phone header)
- SURFACE: the second permitted true-glass surface, same recipe and caps as 4A (surface token ≥82% over ≤12px blur, SHEEN, EDGE). At rest at the top of the page it sits FLAT — no shadow, hairline border only — and the moment the page scrolls, it gains the floating shadow (Spec 01 Section 4C's scrolled-header shadow; in dark theme the Section 2 floating shadow). That rest/flat → scrolled/lifted change is the bar's one state transition, 150ms per Spec 01 Section 13.
- ANATOMY (left to right, one line, 64px tall): the star mark (Spec 01 Section 12B artwork — brand art, never glossed, never the UI star glyph) + the wordmark in ink at the display weight; then the SAME FOUR DOORS as the tab bar — Home, Categories, Search, Events — as text tabs in the same order and words (Spec 08's desktop contract), the active door carrying a gloss pill behind its icon+word pair, built exactly as 4A's active pill but sized to its contents (padding 8px vertical / 14px horizontal, radius 999px); then, at the right, the search field and the theme toggle.
- SEARCH FIELD: a gloss INSET — the one place the finish goes inward instead of outward: surface-alt fill, 1px border-strong, an inset shadow at the top (0 1px 3px, black 10%) and the EDGE highlight at its BOTTOM — the visual language of a machined slot, which every visitor reads as "type here" without being told. Radius 999px (pill) in the bar; the Lucide search icon at 20px in ink-secondary at its left; text 16px minimum (Spec 02's no-auto-zoom rule). Focus: the field's ring is the focus token at 3px, and the inset shadow lifts — focus is the field's one glow, and it belongs to focus alone.
- The phone header (under 900px, where the tab bar exists) keeps Spec 01's compact form — star + wordmark + theme toggle — with the same glass surface and scrolled-shadow behavior, so the two bars feel like one object seen from two sizes.

4C. In-page toolbars (filter / sort / search strips)
- SURFACE: FAKE GLASS ONLY — this is the ruling that protects the two-blur budget. The strip is surface at 97% opacity with the SHEEN layer and EDGE, radius 16px, the Section 4C card shadow. When it sticks under the header on scroll it keeps exactly that surface (no blur is added at stick time — a surface that changes finish when it sticks calls attention to the machinery, and it would spend GPU the budget does not have).
- CONTENTS AND EVENNESS: one fixed-height row on wide screens (64px), wrapping to two rows of the same rhythm on phones

- The strip never floats over content with translucency, never carries its own shadow stronger than a card's, and its sticky offset is exactly the header's height so the two bars stack like one machined unit (Spec 01 Section 14's focus rule applies: a focused element is never hidden beneath either).

5. ENGAGEMENT THROUGH POLISH — STATES, AND THE FORBIDDEN
Engagement here means a site that FEELS responsive, finished, and alive under the thumb — earned by statecraft, never by tricks. No dark patterns: nothing below manufactures urgency, disguises an action, or animates to steal attention from content.

- PRESS (the most important state on a touch site): every tappable gloss surface answers within the tap — primary surfaces shift to primary-deep, the SHEEN drops to half strength, and the element settles 1px (transform only) with its shadow shortening by half. Duration 120ms. A button that does not visibly answer a tap feels broken to this audience, however fast the next page is.
- HOVER (mouse devices only, per Spec 01 Section 7C): the primary's shadow deepens one step and the surface lifts at most 2px (transform); cards deepen border to border-strong. Touch devices get NO hover states, exactly as Spec 01 ruled.
- FOCUS-VISIBLE GLOSS: focus keeps Spec 01's 3px ring with 2px offset, unconditionally. The gloss addition: on PRIMARY surfaces only, the ring is joined by the EDGE highlight brightening one step — focus should feel like the surface lighting up for the keyboard user, not like an error outline. The ring is never removed, recolored below its token, or replaced by the brightening alone.
- SKELETONS: loading blocks (Spec 01 Section 11) take the STATIC gloss — surface-alt fill with the SHEEN gradient frozen at its resting angle, so a loading card already looks like a member of the family. NO animated shimmer: a moving sweep on every loading card is a looping animation (Spec 01 Section 13 forbids loops), costs paint on exactly the slow connections that see skeletons longest, and Specs 08/09 already ruled for static skeletons. The skeleton's stillness is the polish.
- THE ONE SHINE SWEEP: exactly one animated gloss exists on the site — a single sheen pass across the BUSINESS SPOTLIGHT panel's frame when the panel first enters the screen: a diagonal white gradient band (peak alpha 14%) traveling across the frame's border zone only (never across its text),

  900ms, transform/opacity only, plays ONCE per page load, and is the second thing reduced motion removes (after Spec 01's fade-rise, which it outranks for removal). It exists because the Spotlight is the page's one showcase surface; a sweep anywhere else is a defect. If the bot cannot confine it to the frame, it does not ship.
- DISABLED/UNAVAILABLE: unchanged from Spec 01 — an action that cannot act is not shown. Gloss never grays-out a dead control into looking tappable.

FORBIDDEN (each is a defect under the standing scan rules):
- Animated gloss anywhere except the one Spotlight sweep;
  looping shine, shimmer, or gradient motion of any kind.
- Gradient or shiny TEXT (background-clipped color text) on any heading, label, or body copy — it measurably lowers the contrast of thin letter strokes and reads as a 2009 blog theme. (The brand wordmark ARTWORK may be drawn glossy as art, per Spec 01 Section 12B; it is a picture, not text, and its alt text carries the name.)
- Gloss or sheen BEHIND body text at any strength past the Section 2 caps, and any sheen at all behind paragraphs, resource copy, or review text.
- Backdrop blur anywhere except 4A/4B under their caps; blur behind modals; "frosted" overlays over scrolling content.
- Drop shadows larger than the named values, colored glow shadows (purple halos) under ordinary content, and shadows in the dark theme beyond the Section 2 floating allowance.
- Stacked translucency: two translucent surfaces overlapping over scrolling content (e.g., a translucent chip row over the glass bar) — compositing cost and muddy color, both.
- Hover gloss on touch, gloss that changes a control's SIZE or position (layout shift), and any finish difference between two instances of the same component on one page (Spec 01 Section 17 evenness applies to shine exactly as to spacing).

6. WHERE GLOSS AND THE BUDGET GENUINELY CONFLICT — RULINGS
==
1. TRUE GLASS vs. CHEAP GPUs. A real backdrop blur repaints on every scroll frame and is the single most expensive effect in this file. RULING: blur survives only on the two fixed bars, capped at 12px with ≥82% opaque color over it, solid fallback mandatory. Every other "glass" on the site is fake (gradient over near-solid base). If the Section 7 cheap-Android check shows scroll jank attributable to the bars, the bars go solid — gloss yields to flow, by the owner's own priority ("visibility and flow and loading" were his words alongside "shiny").
2. SHEEN vs. TEXT CONTRAST. A white gloss lightens whatever it covers, including the ground under white button text.
   RULING: bases were chosen dark enough to pay for the shine in advance (primary #6D28D9 at 7.1:1, Wallace blue #1E40AF at 8.7:1), the sheen is capped at 16% over text, and the worst composite points are computed in Section 3 (5.2:1 and 5.3:1)

— above the 4.5 floor with margin. No surface may exceed the caps to look shinier.
3. DARK-THEME DEPTH vs. SPEC 01's NO-SHADOW RULE. Gloss wants shadows; on near-black they are invisible paint cost. RULING: Spec 01 stands for content; the single floating-bar/modal shadow in Section 2 is the whole exception, because a bar the eye cannot separate from scrolling content fails its job. Nothing else in the dark theme casts a shadow.
4. THE SWEEP vs. SPEC 01's MOTION BUDGET. Section 13 allows a short list of motions and forbids loops; a shine sweep is neither listed nor a loop. RULING: it is admitted as a one-time, once-per-load, frame-only, reduced-motion-killed exception, named in Section 5, and it is the LAST motion that will be admitted by amendment — any future gloss motion requires removing this one.
5. SLEEK vs. CALM FOR OLDER EYES. High-gloss aesthetics trend toward lower contrast and busier surfaces; this audience is the opposite brief. RULING: where a finish choice trades readability for shine, readability wins silently — gloss is concentrated on chrome and controls (Sections 1 and 4), and reading surfaces stay matte. The site should photograph as glossy and READ as calm.

7. PRE-PUBLISH VISUAL QA — THE FINISH CHECKLIST

Run with Spec 01 Section 14's verification and Section 17D's evenness checklist, on the Spec 09 reference profile (Moto G Power-class Android, Slow 4G) plus one iPhone. Every line must pass in BOTH site themes (light and dark) and in the Wallace theme where it applies:

1. Scroll test, cheap Android: a long listing page scrolls under both bars with no visible stutter, no bar flicker, and no content ghosting through the bars (the 82% opacity rule).
2. Solid-fallback test: with backdrop filters disabled (and again under emulated prefers-reduced-transparency), both bars render solid, bordered, and finished-looking.
3. Contrast spot-check: white button text measured against the button's LIGHTEST (top) point — at least 4.5:1, expecting ≈5.2:1 (site) and ≈5.3:1 (Wallace); body text on surface and surface-alt in both themes at least 4.5:1, expecting the Section 3 figures.
4. Sheen audit: no text-carrying surface's sheen exceeds the 16% cap; no text-free surface exceeds 28%; no gradient or shiny text anywhere in content (search the stylesheet and the rendered pages).
5. One-family audit: every glossy surface on a page decomposes into BASE + SHEEN + EDGE over Section 3 tokens; any one-off shadow, gradient, or alpha not in this file is removed.
6. Press test: every primary control answers a tap within the tap (deepen + dim sheen + 1px settle); no control changes size or moves its neighbors in any state.
7. Reduced-motion pass: the Spotlight sweep and all transitions are gone; the Spotlight still reads as the showcase (frame + gloss rim intact, static).

8. Forced-colors pass: with system forced-colors on, bars, cards, and controls keep visible boundaries from borders alone; no meaning is lost with gradients stripped.
9. Wallace pass: a Wallace State page shows orange/blue/white gloss content between SITE-themed bars (the chrome boundary rule); blue carries every word; orange appears only as accent or on accent-deep fills with white text.
10. Budget pass (Spec 09): the finish added no image files, no script, and no more than ~3 KB of CSS; page weights and the zero-layout-shift rule re-verified on the home page and the busiest listing page.
11. Photo test: the site, screenshotted at arm's length, reads as ONE product in every theme — same bars, same pill, same rim light — site theme and Wallace alike.

8. BUDGET ACCOUNTING (Spec 09 conformity)
==
- Images added: 0. Fonts added: 0. JavaScript added: 0 (the theme machinery and Spec 08's observers already exist; the Spotlight sweep rides Spec 01's existing fade-rise trigger).
- CSS added: gradients, inset shadows, and the two blur rules inside existing component rules — estimated under 3 KB compressed, inside the 40 KB ceiling with the current sheet's headroom; if the sheet is at its ceiling, gloss rules REPLACE the flat rules they amend (same selectors), they do not stack on top of them.
- Runtime cost: sheen/edge layers paint with their element (zero scroll cost); the only per-frame cost on the site is the two capped bar blurs, with the Section 6 kill-switch ruling if the cheap-Android check fails.

Amendment record: this file amends Spec 01's finish only, per Charles Adams's direction of October 19, 2026 (keep black, purple, and white — and Wallace orange, blue, and white — with a shiny, glossy, sleek finish; upgrade toolbars and tabs). Where this file and Spec 01 disagree about a surface's finish, this file governs; where they disagree about anything else, Spec 01 governs. Prepared October 19, 2026.

PART C - THE MASTER UPGRADE FILE

MASTER UPGRADE FILE - SHOP LOCAL HANCEVILLE
The single submission file for updating the website to its fully professional standard. Prepared for Charles Adams (owner) and Grok, his website bot, October 19, 2026. Companion to the Professional Upgrade Blueprint and Specs 01-11, which this file draws on and which govern detail where this file summarizes.

CONTENTS: Part 0 overriding orders - Part 1 the glossy sleek theme (your black, purple, and white; Wallace State orange, blue, and white) - Part 2 toolbars and tab bar - Part 3 every feature - Part 4 the operating schedule - Part 5 the per-listing instruction standard - Part 6 instructions for each of the 744 listings.

PART 0 - ORDERS THAT OVERRIDE EVERYTHING ELSE

1. Charles Adams is the only approver. Nothing publishes, is added, is removed, or has its contact details changed without his word, except the standing publish list in Part 4 (events status, scores, approved registrations, spot fixes) which he approved once as a schedule.
2. Security and accuracy scans run BEFORE and AFTER every update (standing instruction files, Sections 2-3). Anything that looks hacked, redirected, or injected: STOP, roll back to the last good version first, then report to Charles the same day.
3. The Master File is the only source of truth for facts. Never invent or guess a link, logo, address, phone, hour, date, price, review, or quote.
4. NEVER LINK (verified hijacked, taken over, expired, parked, or spam): nahba.org, davesbodyshop.com, tellico4x4.com, highwaypicker.com, countrylivinginc.org, balloonbazaar.net, velvetsummer.com, sunflourbakeryandeatery.com, topusabrowse.top, usabizora.top, mannshomegarden.top, cullmanorthodox.com (use cullmanorthodox.org), and any other unconfirmed .top domain posing as a local business.
5. Every feature in Part 3 is a build order, not a suggestion. Build in the order given; report each to Charles as finished.

PART 1 - THE THEME: BLACK, PURPLE, AND WHITE, GLOSSY AND SLEEK

(Charles's standing colors, new finish - Spec 11 governs detail. Wallace State content wears orange, blue, and white with the same finish, per Section 3C below. The site's bars - header and bottom tab bar - always wear black, purple, and white, even on Wallace State pages; the Wallace theme governs the content between them.)

1. THE FINISH IN ONE IDEA: GLOSSY FRAME, CALM PAGE

Gloss lives on the CHROME and the CONTROLS — the bars, buttons, chips, badges, frames, and the hero's search pill. The PAGE — listing text, descriptions, resource copy — stays matte and calm. A site that is shiny everywhere reads as an advertisement; a site whose frame is polished and whose reading surfaces are quiet reads as a professional product (the pattern on Apple's and Google's own service pages: glossy navigation and controls, flat reading surfaces). Three rules carry the whole system:

1. ONE GLOSS RECIPE, EVERYWHERE. Every glossy surface on the site is built from the same three layers (Section 2). If a surface's shine cannot be described as those three layers over a token color, it is off-system and is a defect.
2. GLOSS NEVER CARRIES MEANING AND NEVER TOUCHES READABILITY. No information may exist only as a shine, a gradient, or a shadow.
   Every gloss layer is decorative, sits behind or above a surface whose flat version would still pass every contrast rule, and is capped so the lightest point under any text still passes 4.5:1
   (the caps in Section 2 are computed, not guessed).
3. GLOSS MUST BE FREE. No image files, no extra fonts, no script.
   Gradients and inset highlights are painted once by the browser and cost nothing while scrolling, because they are attached to the element itself rather than to a fixed overlay. Anything that requires the browser to repaint a large blurred or translucent region on every scroll frame is forbidden except the two named bars in Section 4, under their caps.

2. THE GLOSS RECIPE — THREE LAYERS, WITH CAPS
==
Every glossy surface = BASE + SHEEN + EDGE, in this order:

- BASE: one flat token color from Section 3. The base alone, with its paired text color, already passes contrast. Gloss is never used to rescue a base that fails.
- SHEEN: a top-down linear gradient of pure white fading out — white at the capped alpha at the very top edge, reaching fully transparent at 55% of the surface's height. It is layered OVER the base as a background-image; it never replaces the base. THE CAP (a hard rule, verified below): on any surface that carries text, the sheen alpha at the top edge is at most 16% (alpha 0.16). On surfaces that carry no text (frames, the hero band, decorative panels) the cap is 28%.
  Why 16%: the primary button's base, purple #6D28D9, passes with white text at 7.10:1. Blending 16% white over it produces #844ADF at the lightest point, where white text still passes at 5.22:1. At 22% the composite falls to 4.58:1 — technically a pass with no safety margin on a sunlit cheap screen. 16% is the cap because it keeps every glyph on the button above 5:1 at every point of the gradient.
- EDGE: two 1px inset lines painted with inset box-shadow — a highlight line at the top (inset 0 1px 0, white at 25% alpha on light surfaces and on purple/blue fills; white at 12% alpha on dark surfaces) and a shade line at the bottom (inset 0 -1px 0, black at 18% alpha on filled/colored surfaces, black at 8% on white surfaces). The edge is what makes a flat gradient read as a polished physical surface; it is also the cheapest layer — two inset shadows repaint only with their element.

DEPTH (shadows): gloss surfaces that float (cards on the page, the two bars, modals) keep Spec 01 Section 4C's two-part soft shadow in the light theme (0 1px 2px at 6% black + 0 4px 16px at 6% black under cards). ONE AMENDMENT to Spec 01 for the dark theme: Spec 01 forbade all dark-theme shadows; the gloss finish permits exactly ONE functional shadow — under the two floating bars (sticky header, bottom tab bar) and under modals — at 0 8px 28px, black at 45% alpha, because a floating bar over scrolling near-black content needs separation the eye can see. Dark cards and dark in-page surfaces still get NO shadow; elevation-by-lightness (surface tokens, Section 3) does that work, exactly as Spec 01 ruled. Shadow blur radii never exceed the values named here and in Spec 01 Section 4C — large soft shadows under scrolling content are a paint cost and are forbidden (Section 5).

GLASS — THE HONEST RULES:
- TRUE GLASS (a real backdrop blur) is allowed on AT MOST TWO surfaces in the whole site: the sticky header and the bottom tab bar (Section 4). Conditions, all mandatory: blur radius at most 12px; the surface color is laid over the blur at at least 82% opacity, so content passing beneath never ghosts through legibly and text on the bar never competes with moving shapes; and the bar carries its EDGE highlight line so its boundary is visible even where the blur is subtle.
- FAKE GLASS everywhere else: a surface that should feel glass-like (the in-page filter strip when stuck, the hero's search pill, the lightbox panel) uses a TRANSLUCENT GRADIENT OVER A NEARLY SOLID BASE — base color at 96–100% opacity with the standard SHEEN layer — and NO backdrop blur. To the eye it reads as polished glass; to a cheap phone GPU it is one flat painted element.
- FALLBACKS (mandatory, in this order): if the browser does not support backdrop blur, or the visitor has turned on reduced transparency (the prefers-reduced-transparency setting), or forced-colors mode is active, BOTH bars render in their SOLID surface token with the EDGE line and no blur and no translucency. The site must look finished — not broken, not plainer in a way that looks like a bug — in that state; the solid version is a designed state, not an error state.
- The service worker and Spec 09's rules are untouched: gloss adds no requests and no caching questions.

PER-SURFACE RECIPES (apply BASE + SHEEN + EDGE unless stated):
- LISTING CARDS: matte face, glossy rim. The card face is the flat surface token with NO sheen behind the text zone. Gloss appears only as (a) the EDGE top highlight at 40% of the standard strength (white 10% alpha, light theme; white 6%, dark) and (b) the Section 4C soft shadow in light theme. The card's logo box keeps Spec 01's treatment exactly.
- PRIMARY BUTTONS (purple): the full recipe at the 16% text cap — base #6D28D9, SHEEN white 16% → transparent at 55%, EDGE both lines, plus the resting shadow 0 1px 2px black 20% + 0 4px 12px purple-tinted black 18%. Pressed state in Section 5.

- SECONDARY BUTTONS: flat surface fill, 2px primary border (per Spec 01 Section 8A), EDGE top highlight only, no sheen, no shadow. The contrast between the one glossy primary and the flat secondaries is deliberate: gloss marks the main action.
- CHIPS (filters): unselected — flat, per Spec 01 Section 8B. Selected — the full primary recipe (same as the primary button), because a selected chip is a small primary button.
- BADGES (Open Now, New, Events count, review stars' container): full recipe at the 16% text cap over their base token, pill radius per Spec 01. A badge's WORDS carry its meaning (Spec 02 rule); gloss is decoration on the pill, never a substitute for the word or the icon.
- HERO: the photograph stays a photograph (Spec 04). Legibility comes from a FLAT gradient scrim — transparent at 35% of the hero's height deepening to the ink token at 88% alpha at the bottom — never from blur or gloss over the photo. Gloss in the hero lives on (a) the search pill: full recipe over the surface token, the glossiest element on the page, because it is the page's main control; and (b) a 3px sheen rule under the hero — a horizontal gradient bar in the primary purple with the SHEEN layer, no text on it (28% cap applies).
- MODALS AND THE PHOTO LIGHTBOX (Spec 08): SOLID surface token, full EDGE, the one permitted dark scrim behind (ink at 72% alpha, FLAT — no backdrop blur; see Conflicts, Section 6). The panel's own gloss rim is what makes it feel premium; blurring the page behind a dialog is the classic cheap-phone jank and is forbidden here.
- THE REGISTER GRAPHIC'S FRAME: the Register Now graphic sits in a gloss FRAME, built as a wrapper with 6px padding whose background is the primary gloss recipe (base #6D28D9 + SHEEN at the 28% no-text cap), radius 16px per Spec 01, the graphic itself inset with radius 10px. In the Wallace theme the frame uses the Wallace blue recipe (Section 3). The frame is how a no-logo listing still looks finished and intentional rather than empty.

3. TOKEN SETS TUNED FOR GLOSS AND CONTRAST

Roles are named once and used in both themes. "Primary" is the purple. Every text pairing below lists its computed contrast; the floor is 4.5:1 for text (Spec 02), 3:1 for the focus ring and other essential non-text indicators, and this set aims at 7:1 for body-adjacent text wherever the palette allows.

3A. SITE THEME — LIGHT (white surfaces)

- page-bg: #FAFAFC (soft white; cards sit visibly on it)
- surface: #FFFFFF (cards, bars, panels)
- surface-alt: #F3F1F8 (faint lavender-gray; bands, wells, skeleton blocks, embed resting boxes)
- surface-raised: #FFFFFF (modals; distinguished by shadow)
- ink: #17121F on surface 18.4:1 · on surface-alt 16.4:1
- ink-secondary: #4C4660 on surface 8.9:1 · on surface-alt 8.0:1
- primary: #6D28D9 text/links on surface 7.1:1 ·

                  white text on primary 7.1:1
- primary-deep:   #5B21B6  pressed/active base; white text 9.0:1;
                  also the foot of the primary gradient where a gradient foot is used under the sheen
- primary-bright: #7C3AED  DECORATION ONLY — gradient accents,
                  the hero sheen rule, large shapes; never text,
                  never a text background (white on it is 5.7:1, legal but below this set's standard for text)
- border:         #D9D4E3  (decorative hairlines)
- border-strong:  #B7AED0  (chip and input borders per Spec 01)
- focus-ring:     #6D28D9  on page-bg 6.8:1 (floor for rings: 3:1)
- gloss caps:     SHEEN ≤16% over text surfaces, ≤28% over
                  text-free surfaces; worst point under white button text = #844ADF composite, 5.2:1. PASS.

3B. SITE THEME — DARK (black surfaces)
- page-bg:        #0A0A0E  (near-black, faintly purple)
- surface:        #14141B  (cards, bars)
- surface-alt:    #1A1A23  (bands, wells, resting boxes)
- surface-raised: #1D1D27  (modals, the tab bar's active pill backing where specified, menus)
- ink:            #F5F3FA  on page-bg 18.0:1 · on surface 16.7:1
- ink-secondary:  #B9B4C7  on surface 9.1:1
- primary:        #A78BFA  text/links on surface 6.7:1 · on page-bg 7.3:1 (a light violet; the dark theme's purple must lighten, per Spec 01's rule that dark tokens are derived, never inverted)
- primary-fill:   #6D28D9  the button/chip fill in BOTH themes, white text 7.1:1 — one button color site-wide, so a Call button is the same object in either theme; its SHEEN uses the same 16% cap (composite worst point 5.2:1, as in 3A)
- primary-deep:   #5B21B6  pressed state of primary-fill
- border:         #2A2A38
- border-strong:  #44445C
- focus-ring:     #C4B5FD  on surface 9.9:1
- gloss:          SHEEN on dark surfaces uses the same white gradient at the same caps; the EDGE top highlight drops to 12% alpha (a full-strength highlight on near-black reads as a scratch, not a polish). Elevation is by surface lightness steps above; the only shadow is the Section 2 floating-bar/modal shadow.

3C. WALLACE STATE THEME — ORANGE, BLUE, WHITE Applies to Wallace State pages and information only, per the owner's amendment. It is a WHITE-BASED theme in both of the visitor's light/dark settings — the college's own identity is white-based, and the swap should read as stepping into Wallace State's own section, the way the college's site itself looks.
The finish is IDENTICAL: same three layers, same caps, same shadow values, with blue and orange standing in for purple.
- page-bg:        #F7FAFD
- surface:        #FFFFFF
```

- surface-alt: #EFF4FB (faint blue-gray)
- ink: #101828 on surface 17.8:1 · on surface-alt 16.1:1
- ink-secondary: #43536B on surface 7.8:1 · on surface-alt 7.1:1
- primary (blue): #1E40AF text/links on surface 8.7:1 · white text on it 8.7:1. Blue carries ALL text duties.
- primary-bright: #1D4ED8 links/large headings where the brighter blue is wanted: 6.7:1 on white — passes, but #1E40AF is the default; #1D4ED8 is for large text and graphic accents.
- primary-deep: #1E3A8A pressed/active base for blue fills.
- accent (orange):#EA580C 3.6:1 on white — ACCENT ONLY: rules, underlines, icon strokes, large graphic shapes, the sheen-rule under a Wallace hero. NEVER body text, never small text, never a small badge's text color.
- accent-deep: #C2410C the one orange allowed to carry words:
                  white text on it 5.2:1 — used for badge/chip fills where orange must hold a label (e.g., a "Lions" tag), and for orange text at 18px bold or larger where blue would be wrong.
- border: #D5DEE9 · border-strong: #A9BBD1
- focus-ring: #1E40AF (8.7:1 on white class)
- gloss caps: identical — SHEEN ≤16% over text (blue button worst point: #1E40AF + 20% white = #4B66BF composite, white text 5.3:1 — the cap stays 16% for consistency and margin), ≤28% text-free.

PART 2 - TOOLBARS AND TAB BAR (Spec 11, Section 4) AND THE POLISH RULES THAT BIND THE WHOLE SITE (Sections 5-8)
4. TOOLBARS AND TAB BAR — THE SLEEK REDESIGN
==
Anatomy (items, order, sizes) comes from Spec 01 Sections 6A, 6B, and 6D and Spec 08 and does not change. This section replaces their SURFACES with the gloss finish and settles the open design questions (glass, badges, the active treatment) in the sleeker direction the owner asked for.

THE CHROME BOUNDARY RULE (decided here, binding): the two global bars — the sticky header and the bottom tab bar — ALWAYS wear the site's black/purple/white finish, including on Wallace State pages. The Wallace orange/blue/white theme governs the page CONTENT between the bars. A visitor's sense of "where am I in the app" must never change color under their thumbs; the theme swap is a property of the destination, not of the vehicle. (This is the pattern of university systems and app stores: constant chrome, branded content.) In-page toolbars (4C) are content, and DO take the page's theme.

4A. Bottom tab bar (phones) — the flagship surface

- SURFACE: true glass, under the Section 2 caps — this is one of the two permitted backdrop-blur surfaces. Surface token at 88% opacity over a blur of at most 12px; SHEEN across the top 55%; the EDGE carried as a physical top border: a 1px line that is itself a horizontal gradient — border-strong at the ends, primary at 45% alpha at the center — above a 1px white highlight at 10% (light) / 6% (dark). The permitted floating-bar shadow (Section 2) applies upward. Fallback per Section 2: solid surface token, same border treatment, no blur. Geometry unchanged: 64px + safe-area inset, per Spec 01 Section 6B; content padding unchanged.
- ACTIVE TAB: the glossy purple pill. A 56×32px pill behind the icon, filled with the FULL primary recipe — base primary-fill #6D28D9 in both themes, SHEEN at the 16% cap, EDGE highlight — radius 999px, and the icon drawn in white at 24px. The label beneath turns ink at weight 700 (Spec 01's rule: fill + weight + color, never color alone — here the pill's white icon, the filled shape, and the bold label are three signals). Inactive icons: ink-secondary, no pill, no gloss. The pill is the ONLY glossy element inside the bar, so the eye lands on exactly one place: where you are.
- BADGES: the Events count badge and the gold new-listings dot (Spec 08) restyle as gloss pills: count badge = white numerals on primary-deep #5B21B6 (9.0:1) with the EDGE highlight, 18px minimum height, radius 999px, seated at the icon's top-right, never covering the icon's recognizable shape; the new-listings marker stays a DOT (8px, primary-bright with the EDGE highlight) and never becomes a number it cannot support. The screen-reader names stay exactly as Spec 08 wrote them — gloss changes nothing announced.
- PRESS FEEDBACK: on tap, a tab's pill area shows the pressed treatment of Section 5 for 120ms before navigation paints — feedback at the speed of the tap, transform/opacity only.

4B. Sticky top bar (desktop and tablet; the phone header)
- SURFACE: the second permitted true-glass surface, same recipe and caps as 4A (surface token ≥82% over ≤12px blur, SHEEN, EDGE). At rest at the top of the page it sits FLAT — no shadow, hairline border only — and the moment the page scrolls, it gains the floating shadow (Spec 01 Section 4C's scrolled-header shadow; in dark theme the Section 2 floating shadow). That rest/flat → scrolled/lifted change is the bar's one state transition, 150ms per Spec 01 Section 13.
- ANATOMY (left to right, one line, 64px tall): the star mark (Spec 01 Section 12B artwork — brand art, never glossed, never the UI star glyph) + the wordmark in ink at the display weight; then the SAME FOUR DOORS as the tab bar — Home, Categories, Search, Events — as text tabs in the same order and words (Spec 08's desktop contract), the active door carrying a gloss pill behind its icon+word pair, built exactly as 4A's active pill but sized to its contents (padding 8px vertical / 14px horizontal, radius 999px); then, at the right, the search field and the theme toggle.
- SEARCH FIELD: a gloss INSET — the one place the finish goes inward instead of outward: surface-alt fill, 1px border-strong, an inset shadow at the top (0 1px 3px, black 10%) and the EDGE highlight at its BOTTOM — the visual language of a machined slot, which every visitor reads as "type here" without being told. Radius 999px (pill) in the bar; the Lucide search icon at

  no-auto-zoom rule). Focus: the field's ring is the focus token at 3px, and the inset shadow lifts — focus is the field's one glow, and it belongs to focus alone.
- The phone header (under 900px, where the tab bar exists) keeps Spec 01's compact form — star + wordmark + theme toggle — with the same glass surface and scrolled-shadow behavior, so the two bars feel like one object seen from two sizes.

4C. In-page toolbars (filter / sort / search strips)
- SURFACE: FAKE GLASS ONLY — this is the ruling that protects the two-blur budget. The strip is surface at 97% opacity with the SHEEN layer and EDGE, radius 16px, the Section 4C card shadow. When it sticks under the header on scroll it keeps exactly that surface (no blur is added at stick time — a surface that changes finish when it sticks calls attention to the machinery, and it would spend GPU the budget does not have).
- CONTENTS AND EVENNESS: one fixed-height row on wide screens (64px), wrapping to two rows of the same rhythm on phones
  (Spec 01 Section 17 governs). Left: the results count in words (Spec 03's microcopy — "23 places in Hanceville"), then the filter chips (gloss recipe when selected, per Section 2), then at the right the sort control as a SECONDARY gloss button (flat + EDGE, per Section 2's secondary rule) with the Lucide chevron. In a Wallace-themed page the strip takes Wallace tokens (blue selected chips, blue sort button, orange reserved for the 3px accent rule under the strip's title where a title exists) — same geometry, same gloss, different tokens.
- The strip never floats over content with translucency, never carries its own shadow stronger than a card's, and its sticky offset is exactly the header's height so the two bars stack like one machined unit (Spec 01 Section 14's focus rule applies: a focused element is never hidden beneath either).

==========

5. ENGAGEMENT THROUGH POLISH — STATES, AND THE FORBIDDEN
==========
Engagement here means a site that FEELS responsive, finished, and alive under the thumb — earned by statecraft, never by tricks.
No dark patterns: nothing below manufactures urgency, disguises an action, or animates to steal attention from content.

- PRESS (the most important state on a touch site): every tappable gloss surface answers within the tap — primary surfaces shift to primary-deep, the SHEEN drops to half strength, and the element settles 1px (transform only) with its shadow shortening by half. Duration 120ms. A button that does not visibly answer a tap feels broken to this audience, however fast the next page is.

- HOVER (mouse devices only, per Spec 01 Section 7C): the primary's shadow deepens one step and the surface lifts at most 2px (transform); cards deepen border to border-strong. Touch devices get NO hover states, exactly as Spec 01 ruled.
- FOCUS-VISIBLE GLOSS: focus keeps Spec 01's 3px ring with 2px offset, unconditionally. The gloss addition: on PRIMARY surfaces only, the ring is joined by the EDGE highlight brightening one step — focus should feel like the surface lighting up for the keyboard user, not like an error outline. The ring is never removed, recolored below its token, or replaced by the brightening alone.
- SKELETONS: loading blocks (Spec 01 Section 11) take the STATIC gloss — surface-alt fill with the SHEEN gradient frozen at its resting angle, so a loading card already looks like a member of the family. NO animated shimmer: a moving sweep on every loading card is a looping animation (Spec 01 Section 13 forbids loops), costs paint on exactly the slow connections that see skeletons longest, and Specs 08/09 already ruled for static skeletons. The skeleton's stillness is the polish.
- THE ONE SHINE SWEEP: exactly one animated gloss exists on the site — a single sheen pass across the BUSINESS SPOTLIGHT panel's frame when the panel first enters the screen: a diagonal white gradient band (peak alpha 14%) traveling across the frame's border zone only (never across its text), 900ms, transform/opacity only, plays ONCE per page load, and is the second thing reduced motion removes (after Spec 01's fade-rise, which it outranks for removal). It exists because the Spotlight is the page's one showcase surface; a sweep anywhere else is a defect. If the bot cannot confine it to the frame, it does not ship.
- DISABLED/UNAVAILABLE: unchanged from Spec 01 — an action that cannot act is not shown. Gloss never grays-out a dead control into looking tappable.

FORBIDDEN (each is a defect under the standing scan rules):
- Animated gloss anywhere except the one Spotlight sweep; looping shine, shimmer, or gradient motion of any kind.
- Gradient or shiny TEXT (background-clipped color text) on any heading, label, or body copy — it measurably lowers the contrast of thin letter strokes and reads as a 2009 blog theme. (The brand wordmark ARTWORK may be drawn glossy as art, per Spec 01 Section 12B; it is a picture, not text, and its alt text carries the name.)
- Gloss or sheen BEHIND body text at any strength past the Section 2 caps, and any sheen at all behind paragraphs, resource copy, or review text.
- Backdrop blur anywhere except 4A/4B under their caps; blur behind modals; "frosted" overlays over scrolling content.
- Drop shadows larger than the named values, colored glow shadows (purple halos) under ordinary content, and shadows in the dark theme beyond the Section 2 floating allowance.
- Stacked translucency: two translucent surfaces overlapping over scrolling content (e.g., a translucent chip row over the glass bar) — compositing cost and muddy color, both.

- Hover gloss on touch, gloss that changes a control's SIZE or position (layout shift), and any finish difference between two instances of the same component on one page (Spec 01 Section 17 evenness applies to shine exactly as to spacing).

6. WHERE GLOSS AND THE BUDGET GENUINELY CONFLICT — RULINGS
==
1. TRUE GLASS vs. CHEAP GPUs. A real backdrop blur repaints on every scroll frame and is the single most expensive effect in this file. RULING: blur survives only on the two fixed bars, capped at 12px with ≥82% opaque color over it, solid fallback mandatory. Every other "glass" on the site is fake (gradient over near-solid base). If the Section 7 cheap-Android check shows scroll jank attributable to the bars, the bars go solid — gloss yields to flow, by the owner's own priority ("visibility and flow and loading" were his words alongside "shiny").
2. SHEEN vs. TEXT CONTRAST. A white gloss lightens whatever it covers, including the ground under white button text.
   RULING: bases were chosen dark enough to pay for the shine in advance (primary #6D28D9 at 7.1:1, Wallace blue #1E40AF at 8.7:1), the sheen is capped at 16% over text, and the worst composite points are computed in Section 3 (5.2:1 and 5.3:1) — above the 4.5 floor with margin. No surface may exceed the caps to look shinier.
3. DARK-THEME DEPTH vs. SPEC 01's NO-SHADOW RULE. Gloss wants shadows; on near-black they are invisible paint cost.
   RULING: Spec 01 stands for content; the single floating-bar/modal shadow in Section 2 is the whole exception, because a bar the eye cannot separate from scrolling content fails its job. Nothing else in the dark theme casts a shadow.
4. THE SWEEP vs. SPEC 01's MOTION BUDGET. Section 13 allows a short list of motions and forbids loops; a shine sweep is neither listed nor a loop. RULING: it is admitted as a one-time, once-per-load, frame-only, reduced-motion-killed exception, named in Section 5, and it is the LAST motion that will be admitted by amendment — any future gloss motion requires removing this one.
5. SLEEK vs. CALM FOR OLDER EYES. High-gloss aesthetics trend toward lower contrast and busier surfaces; this audience is the opposite brief. RULING: where a finish choice trades readability for shine, readability wins silently — gloss is concentrated on chrome and controls (Sections 1 and 4), and reading surfaces stay matte. The site should photograph as glossy and READ as calm.

7. PRE-PUBLISH VISUAL QA — THE FINISH CHECKLIST
==
Run with Spec 01 Section 14's verification and Section 17D's evenness checklist, on the Spec 09 reference profile (Moto

G Power-class Android, Slow 4G) plus one iPhone. Every line must pass in BOTH site themes (light and dark) and in the Wallace theme where it applies:

1. Scroll test, cheap Android: a long listing page scrolls under both bars with no visible stutter, no bar flicker, and no content ghosting through the bars (the 82% opacity rule).
2. Solid-fallback test: with backdrop filters disabled (and again under emulated prefers-reduced-transparency), both bars render solid, bordered, and finished-looking.
3. Contrast spot-check: white button text measured against the button's LIGHTEST (top) point — at least 4.5:1, expecting ≈5.2:1 (site) and ≈5.3:1 (Wallace); body text on surface and surface-alt in both themes at least 4.5:1, expecting the Section 3 figures.
4. Sheen audit: no text-carrying surface's sheen exceeds the 16% cap; no text-free surface exceeds 28%; no gradient or shiny text anywhere in content (search the stylesheet and the rendered pages).
5. One-family audit: every glossy surface on a page decomposes into BASE + SHEEN + EDGE over Section 3 tokens; any one-off shadow, gradient, or alpha not in this file is removed.
6. Press test: every primary control answers a tap within the tap (deepen + dim sheen + 1px settle); no control changes size or moves its neighbors in any state.
7. Reduced-motion pass: the Spotlight sweep and all transitions are gone; the Spotlight still reads as the showcase (frame + gloss rim intact, static).
8. Forced-colors pass: with system forced-colors on, bars, cards, and controls keep visible boundaries from borders alone; no meaning is lost with gradients stripped.
9. Wallace pass: a Wallace State page shows orange/blue/white gloss content between SITE-themed bars (the chrome boundary rule); blue carries every word; orange appears only as accent or on accent-deep fills with white text.
10. Budget pass (Spec 09): the finish added no image files, no script, and no more than ~3 KB of CSS; page weights and the zero-layout-shift rule re-verified on the home page and the busiest listing page.
11. Photo test: the site, screenshotted at arm's length, reads as ONE product in every theme — same bars, same pill, same rim light — site theme and Wallace alike.

8. BUDGET ACCOUNTING (Spec 09 conformity)

- Images added: 0. Fonts added: 0. JavaScript added: 0 (the theme machinery and Spec 08's observers already exist; the Spotlight sweep rides Spec 01's existing fade-rise trigger).
- CSS added: gradients, inset shadows, and the two blur rules inside existing component rules — estimated under 3 KB compressed, inside the 40 KB ceiling with the current sheet's headroom; if the sheet is at its ceiling, gloss rules REPLACE the flat rules they amend (same selectors), they do not stack on top of them.

- Runtime cost: sheen/edge layers paint with their element (zero scroll cost); the only per-frame cost on the site is the two capped bar blurs, with the Section 6 kill-switch ruling if the cheap-Android check fails.

Amendment record: this file amends Spec 01's finish only, per Charles Adams's direction of October 19, 2026 (keep black, purple, and white — and Wallace orange, blue, and white — with a shiny, glossy, sleek finish; upgrade toolbars and tabs). Where this file and Spec 01 disagree about a surface's finish, this file governs; where they disagree about anything else, Spec 01
governs. Prepared October 19, 2026.

PART 3 - EVERY FEATURE (build all, in this order)

FOUNDATION

F1. Every logo field filled from the Master File collection (725 logos); officials' portraits from Spec 04B on government and department listings with the office's Facebook embed beneath.
F2. Spec 01 design system with the Part 1 finish; Spec 01 Section 17 evenness standard verified by its checklist on every page.
F3. One icon family everywhere (Lucide; Tabler only for the Facebook glyph), per the Spec 01 mapping - tabs, categories, and every action button.
F4. Spec 04 photography placed (Grotto hero, town banners, category headers) with license credits; no wrong-place photos.
F5. Spec 03 copy pass: microcopy bank verbatim, three-part listing descriptions, full-site proofread (names exactly as recorded).
F6. Spec 02's 24 must-do rules + its 10-point phone acceptance test (17px+ text, 44px+ targets, forgiving search, zero-result recovery, fixed card order, error states, AA checklist).
F7. Spec 05 infrastructure: Search Console (Charles verifies ownership once), Bing import, structured data (WebSite, Organization, Breadcrumb, Event, per-town ItemList with verified fields only), full sharing tags on every page, Register-page note nudging owners to claim their free Google Business Profile with matching name/address/phone.

LISTING EXPERIENCE

F8. Consistent listing fields (Part 5 standard) on every listing.
F9. Verified hours + Open Now/Closed badge from the visitor's clock; no verified hours, no badge, "call to check" instead.
F10. Facebook embed on every listing that has a page (Spec 09 facade pattern: snapshot card first, live plugin wakes on tap or approach, max 2 loading at once, max 6 live per page, reserved boxes so nothing shifts, 6-second watchdog to the snapshot fallback, dead embeds reported by name).
F11. Charles's own Pages section (Hanceville Entertainment & Shopping; Cullman County Meme Factory) embedded prominently.
F12. Listing photos where the collection holds a real one (uniform 4:3; logo remains the identity image; no stock, no other business's photo).
F13. Swipeable galleries and card rails (scroll-snap; next item peeks; arrows always; dots AND a words counter; no loops, no autoplay).

F14. Zoom lightbox for photos and logos (labeled Bigger / Smaller / Fit buttons; pinch is a bonus; user scaling never disabled).
F15. Fixed bottom tab bar (Part 2) with Events count badge and a gold new-listings dot; desktop sticky bar mirrors it exactly.
F16. Permanent deep link per listing (directory.html#listing-name) landing on the card; share with the three-rung fallback (device share sheet, copy link, selectable panel); print-only QR codes on town sheets and counter cards.
F17. Installable web app: manifest, service worker (Part 4 caching rules), real icon set from the star brand mark, Apple touch icon, favicon file, branded offline page with working tap-to-call links.
F18. Home hero: real Hanceville-area photo (Spec 04), date, and a live National Weather Service strip; Cullman County watches and warnings shown plainly, linked to Cullman County EMA; the hero photo rotates only across visits (with the update cycle), never as a slideshow.
F19. Favorites: Save on each listing, "My Saved Places" view, stored ONLY on the visitor's device. No accounts, no tracking.
F20. Events: Add to Calendar on every event, next-event countdown on the home page, town filter everywhere events appear.
F21. Map page: a pin for every listing with a street address (OpenStreetMap/Leaflet, free), town filter; the map never traps page scroll (labeled "Move the map" control).
F22. Polish set: back-to-top, custom 404 in site style, print-friendly resources and town sheets, full sharing tags on every page (F7), "Links last checked" stamps on listings.

COMMUNITY FEATURES

F23. Business Spotlight of the Week on the home page (logo, live embedded latest post, full listing link; registered businesses eligible; rotation in turn).
F24. School strip (school year): closings, delays, lunch menus from the schools' and county system's own pages only, linked to source; empty when nothing is posted, never stale.
F25. Lost and Found Pets board: submissions through the approval flow (nothing appears without Charles's approval), approved posts expire in 30 days, no animal sales, stated on the board.
F26. New in Town badge on listings under 90 days old, self-removing.
F27. Printable one-page town sheets (name, phone, address) per town, from the same data, offered as downloads.
F28. "What do you need to do today?" task grid on the home page (county pattern) + Visit Cullman-style photo-tile category doors + a "New to Hanceville?" newcomer page + a site-wide alert banner slot used sparingly for real emergencies only.
F29. Register or Update Your Business page (standing spec): the full form, submissions to shoplocalhanceville@gmail.com, nothing auto-publishes, no passwords/payment/ID fields, free forever, stated on the page. Listings without a logo show the Register Now graphic in the logo's place.

REVIEWS (Spec 07 - the lawful design)

F30. On-site reviews: a 1-to-5 star form per listing (large radio stars with word labels Poor to Excellent, older-user first); submissions wait in the moderation queue; nothing public until Charles approves; star-neutral approvals (a civil, factual 1-star publishes on the same terms as a 5-star); rejections only for fake, abuse, or duplicate, each logged with its reason; insider-connection checkbox shown as a "Connected to this business" label; owners may respond, never delete.

F31. Display (at 3+ approved reviews): overall grade = average stars to one decimal; percentage labeled in words ("91% of reviewers rated it 4 or 5 stars"). Sources never blended.

F32. Platform reviews are LINKED, never copied: "Read reviews on Google," "See reviews on Yelp," "See reviews on Facebook" on each listing that has them. (Google forbids storing its reviews; Yelp's API is paid and forbids co-display; Facebook ratings are readable only for Charles's own Pages.) Review structured data covers this site's own collected reviews only. No review incentives, no gating - federal rule.

PERFORMANCE (Spec 09 budgets - hard caps, verified pre-publish)

F33. Page weights: home at most 650 KB first load, listing index at most 550 KB, detail at most 450 KB; total script at most 150 KB; CSS at most 40 KB; logos served at display size (at most 20 KB each); cards in batches of 24. Targets: LCP 2.0s, INP 150ms, CLS 0.05 on a Moto G-class phone, slow 4G. Animation: transform and opacity only; reduced-motion fully honored. The site must remain fully usable with every third party blocked.

PART 4 - OPERATING SCHEDULE (Spec 10 - Grok's standing duties)

- HOURLY 6:00 AM-6:00 PM CT: verify embeds (Charles's two Pages first, rotating twelfth of listings, all snapshot cards, anything flagged). Log quietly; fix snapshots on the spot. Escalation: fix-and-note in the daily report; same-day message for breakage across two checks or a restricted page; immediate message, any hour, for tampering or a hijacked domain.
- UPDATE PASSES 6:45 AM and 4:30 PM CT: before-scan; events and Bulldogs scores from the schools' own pages; weather source check; snapshot refreshes; Charles-approved items published; after-scan; one plain-word commit per change-set; a bad publish is rolled back first and reported second. One daily report after the afternoon pass, problems first, stating which cycles actually ran.
- SERVICE WORKER caching: versioned shell cache; network-first for pages and data; never cache Facebook's SDK, plugins, or any facebook.com response; old caches deleted on activation; no mid-visit forced reloads.
- The six-hour independent Muse check continues as watchdog. A disagreement between Grok and the watchdog is reported to Charles, never silently resolved.
- Honest limit (stated once): Grok's schedules live in Charles's own Grok account; a free account's two daily tasks fit the two passes. If hourly runs are unavailable on his plan, the passes plus the watchdog are the standing fallback, and visitors lose nothing because embeds refresh themselves at load.

PART 5 - THE PER-LISTING INSTRUCTION STANDARD

Every listing on the website is governed by instructions in two layers: (1) the universal rules below, which bind EVERY listing whether or not it has its own block, and (2) its own block in Part 6, stating what is specific to it: its links, its embed, its logo, its portraits or theme, and its flags.

UNIVERSAL RULES (every listing, every cycle):

U1. Update only from the listing's Master File record. Never from search results, similar businesses, or guesses.

U2. Retest every link at each update pass. A failing or wrong-destination link: remove the LINK only, keep the listing, report to Charles the same day.

U3. A listing, its logo, or its posts come down only on Charles's word, or when the organization itself asks (tell Charles the same day). A closure report is a flag for Charles, never a deletion on its own.

U4. No website: the Facebook page may be the main link only while it has posted within 30 days; a quiet page is reported, not silently kept.

U5. Embeds follow F10. A listing with no recorded Facebook page gets no embed; a newly found page goes to Charles first.

U6. Logos follow the display standard (normalized copy, own logo only, Register graphic when none exists).

U7. Any listing found on the website without a Part 6 block is reported to Charles by name at the next pass, and a block is drafted for his approval.

UPDATING A LISTING (the bot's routine): pull the Master File record; apply changed fields exactly; retest its links; confirm logo and embed render; note the change in the daily report.

TAKING INFORMATION DOWN (the bot's routine): confirm the order (Charles's word, the organization's own request, or a Part 6 flag that has ripened with Charles's decision); remove exactly what was ordered and nothing else; if a whole listing is removed, leave its deep link landing on the honest "moved or closed" message, never a dead end; note it in the daily report.

PART 6 - INSTRUCTIONS FOR EACH LISTING (744 listings)

PER-LISTING BOT INSTRUCTIONS - generated October 19, 2026 from the verified Master File data (website entities file, directory sections, logo index, Spec 04B portraits, and the flagged-cases table).

744 listings carry a block below. Every block states what is specific to that listing (its links, its embed, its logo, its flags) and then the three universal rules that bind every listing.

A listing that ever appears on the website without a block here is governed by Part 5 of the Master Upgrade File until its block is added at the next update pass - the bot reports such listings to Charles by name.
